

Vegard Solheim

More Traditions

This document is a collection of thematically associated articles copied from odelsarven.com: Is there a moral layer to our myths? (2019); Our “Community” (2020); The fear of being called a racist (2020); The overwhelming symbolism in our myths (2020); Did the Vikings rape? (2020); The Wild Boars are coming! (2020); The multi ethnic and multi cultural Vikings (2020); Timelessness and Eternity (2020); A thousand years of rain and The Thirty Years' War (2020); The Troll Layers (2021); Pagan Wisdom in the Dystopian Present (2021); Norðvegr and the first Globalism (2021).

Familiarity with the author’s Our Traditions (2018, published in English in 2020) is recommended, and articles from odelsarven.com that feature the author’s published books are omitted here.

The compiler of this document claims the right of the thule to disregard notions of copyright for the sake of the preservation of knowledge.

Is there a moral layer in our myths?

If you argue that there is a general moral layer in our myths, you are wrong. The Christians added morals to our myths in their later "presentations and interpretations" of the original oral tradition they wrote down, and argued that Freya was a slut, Lóki a swindler and Þórr an untempered lowbrow etc. The same way, they systematically smeared our true heritage and ancestors. They have done it ever since, either in ignorance and/or by design.

The Poetic Edda (what we have of the original version) can't be Christian influenced to any remarkable degree. You would see that clearly if you understood the poems, and know the Norse meanings and metaphores. The prose Edda is, one can argue. But, the prose Edda is not myths. Neither is Hávamál, before one enter the metaphorical landscape from stanza 146.

In other words, the Christians did not write/invent the myths - but they were interpreting the poetic Edda literally, as any dummed down abrahamist would do. That was the moral layer the Christians put in their later interpretations. There are no general moral layer in our myths. The Christian litterate interpretations were used to smear our pagan ancestors. To show them as lowbrow, primitive and immoral "barbarians". The fact is 100% opposite, you see.

So, how can we argue that the poetic Edda is not tampered with, that they were not significantly different in the oral traditional past, and that the Christians did not "write in an immoral layer". We can, because otherwise all of our myths would have no meaning. The same goes for our fairytales, but to a lesser degree in the form of heroes and good deeds. That said, like our myths, we have numerous fairytales with no good deeds or "moral" as well, even though the theme and the meaning is all the same.

Morals did exist in our pagan laws and tribes, but morals as applicable layers in our myths do not. By an applicable layer, we mean a layer you can recognize in all the myths. That layer does not exist, and it does not matter how hard certain people want it to.

Let us take only one example here. Our myths are full of them;

In Skaldskáparmál Þórr lits the pyre of Baldr with his hammer. He then kicks a dwarf into the pyre. "What a cruel immoral thing to do", would a child say, reading the myth literally. "Look at how the Christians re-wrote our myths", would a pagan with an abrahamic mindset say. "Look at what kind of idols our ancestors had, and how cruel they were", would a Christian say. "Look at the cool Þórr in anger kicking a little dwarf into the pyre. Might is right dude!", would a Vikings TV-show lowbrow plastic Viking fan say.

They are all too dumb to see that general moral is irrelevant to our myths. It has never been relevant.

The dwarf kicked into the pyre is in Norse named Lét. The Norse meaning is "high sound/bang". In other words, flintstone (stone used to lit by friction).

Did you know that it was a custom to sacrifice flintstones in the pyre for the dead? That it makes a high sound and sparkles? Did you know that the flintstone is the life force, and is Mjöllnir?

Did you know that the dead was buried with such stones of life force on the chest? (like the later amulett of Mjöllnir, carried by a lot of plastic Vikings to this day). Did you know that this dwarf by the name Lét goes together with the dead and beyond? That he is the attribute of Þórr himself, and sacrificed for eternity? So the hammer/stone/heart/life force would again be ignited, in the re-born? Why else would you think the myth tell of this "immoral Þórr"?

It's all about metaphores... It's not about moral.

Nature has no "human moral". Our myths are the patterns of Nature. They are coded science.

So, did not our ancestors have moral then? (a commonly asked question from my own children and other "children" especially on Twitter.-) Of course they had. We have several sources of moral, codex of honor, laws etc. from our pagan ancestors. They were of higher moral than any of us today, I argue. But, the myths themselves have no general layer of moral, their encoded meaning are not about that, and serves no such purpose.

The poetic Edda is as pagan as can be, and the myths loose their meaning if you insert moral, either good or bad - in litteral sense. Skaldskápmál would loose the enitre foundation of coded knowlegde, as for the rest of them.

And, how would these myths even serve their purpose before the Christians arguable re-wrote them with "bad morals"? I am sorry, but that's just not possible. It only serves the purpose of New Age BS and Ásatru with an abrahamic twist - wich this "pagan community" reeks of.

The Christians were/are responsible for not understanding our myths, and on the basis of only litteraly and therefore wrong conclutions, presenting our pagan ancestors as rapists, sluts, traitors, murderers and thieves. In best cases, like linear stories of moral and society from a dark unlightened pagan past.

You know, being a pagan, and to be able to grasp what paganism is, demands a three digit IQ. It demands a sacrifice for wisdom, reflection and stamina. It's not for the lazy.

Our "community"

I often hear so-called pagans use the term "our community", as if it was a sort of pagan community of any value out there. As a "Christian community" (read: sect), where you are either "in" or "out". Well, if you have grown up in a Christian environment in for example United Juice of America, you are probably so broken by this monotheistic mindset, that you simply are not able to grasp what paganism really is...

Your so-called "pagan community" are a bunch of "digital soldiers" of opinions, scattered all over the globe, useless without the Internet and modern constructs.

No, there is no such thing as a "pagan community", because paganism is about family and tribe, by blood. Any other type of "community" is artificial and destructive. If you have read any relevant history at all, you would know that paganism was set for destruction when these bonds lost value and were de-constructed. Communities equals centralization, specialization and quantity - not quality. Paganism is the opposite.

Any form of "community", and especially "a pagan one", will attract the absolute worst scum and filth you possibly can dig out.

Your tribe is your family, your relatives by blood. Those you trust 100%. Those you would go to war with, and risk your own life for - every single one of them. That is why our ancestors never used the term "community". That is why a tribe (in the correct term) never exceeded 150 individuals.

Stop looking for a "tribe" on the Internet, and believe that you are part of a "community" that represent anything else than slander, envy, backstabbing and decay.

A tribe, you must produce yourself - through your own descendants.

The fear of being called a racist

Let us get things straight at once. The official definition of a racist is:

a person who shows or feels discrimination or prejudice against people of other races, or who believes that a particular race is superior to another.

Racist is a buzzword, thrown out from all angles and at every opponent of the new liberal "order" and often at persons that maybe would provide good arguments hard to contradict.

These days we see an accumulating push of the general "anti-racist agenda", in the aftermath of the death of Africans living in America under what is known as "police brutality". There are many interests linked up to these riots, from simple thieves looking for something to loot, to NGO's backed by billions of dollars to paint a mirage, to political interests, pure troublemakers, the anger of losers, victims of pure propaganda and so on. It is all mixed up in a chaos of despair - that a few benefit from, and normal people (the majority) suffers under. This unbalanced so called "racist police brutality" is not backed by any reliable statistic (there is brutality against white people too), but it is used as a spark to revolt, with a complex underlying foundation.

What is obvious from a logical and decent perspective, is that the anti-racist agenda is the most racist of all. The white native European population (including Europeans living in America) seems to be eternal submitted to the "original sind" of any possible ancestor, any historical event - either historically right or wrong (mostly wrong). Any movement named "White Lives Matter" is defined as "hate", while "Black Lives Matter" is praised. Even "All Lives Matter" is considered racist. Submissive white people (even the police) is "taking a knee" because Jewish ships arrived at the US shores with slaves for their plantations in New Israel. It is all so absurd, that it becomes comical, in a tragic way...

Well, back to the definition of "Racist"; I would argue that every healthy human being, of any race, is racist. It is the most natural thing in the world. Ask yourself these questions:

- Do you not care more for your own children than others?
  - Do you not care more for your family than others?
  - Do you not care more for your kin than others?
  - If you are from Africa: Do you not care more for your fellow Africans than for Europeans?
  - If you are from Europe: Do you not care more for your fellow Europeans than for Africans?
- Of course you do. If you are not sick.

...and by doing that, you naturally discriminate. If you as an African care more for your fellow Africans, you are not only discriminating, but you also have prejudice. It is the most natural thing in the world, and it is nothing wrong with it. If it was not so, you would probably not be walking on this planet right now. It is all basic survival instincts.

Why is it so, that if you watch mainstream news and see a major long lasting reportage of something meaningless at your local level, then followed by a 5 second short report of a hundred killed on the other side of the globe (if it is even reported) is all "natural"?

Then, we have the superiority question in the definition;

Individuals are different. They come in all types, in every race - but race is not a social construct. Secondly, there are differences, both physical and mental. Quite significant differences, generally speaking. Differences that have been shaped through thousands of years in the process of natural selection and natural habitats. All that leads us to culture. And culture eats modern systems for breakfast.

A native Congolese would be superior to a native Norwegian in Kongo. Without a modern and artificial civilization, without constant shades, sun block, air conditioning, modern logistic systems and the physical abilities like short muscle fibers and low fat percentage to naturally get food; the Norwegian would soon die, if he did not move back to his natural habitat.

A native Norwegian would be superior to a native Congolese in Norway. Without a modern and artificial civilization, without constant artificial supply of D-vitamins, heating, modern logistic systems, high fat percentage and long muscle fibers to get food, and the mental ability and culture to plan and have foresight; the Congolese would very soon die, of hunger and disease, if he did not move back to his natural habitat.

So, I am not a white supremacist. But, I argue that a native Scandinavian is superior in Scandinavia. That is all. And, best of all, Mother Nature agrees with me.

The fight against the so called "racism" is doomed to fail. You have to remember that the problematic issues with "racism" occurs in multi cultural societies, ergo; in unnatural societies. You can use the coming years to read the worlds written history the last 3 000 years. You will find no examples of functional multi cultural societies. Not a single one. What you will find is decay, turmoil, blood, genocide and desert... The multi cultural project has failed, and it was always a failure.

Everyone likes their own best, and that should come to no ones surprise.

What allows a multi cultural population to even artificially exist, and to revolt, loot, use violence, destroy and protest - is the government and institutions they think they revolt against. Such a society needs first and foremost compliant slaves.

If we return to the somewhat 3 000 years of written history, you will find no bigger paradox than what we are witnessing these days...

The overwhelming symbolism in our myths

You will never be "finished" reading the elder Edda, as a modern human being, weakened by civilization, lack of memory, and the written few latinized words you use daily. You might as well admit it, once and for all: we really lost a lot the last 2 000 or so years. But, it can be restored, with time, dedication and reflection.

Every stanza in the poetic Edda is fully packed with knowlegde and symbolism. They are in a way made and ment for individuals knowing the mythical names, meanings, kennings and stories - by heart.

In this way, you can randomly pick a stanza, and begin to crack the codes. These codes always boils down to a pattern. This pattern is recognizable throughout our myths, songs, ballads, fairy tales and poems.

I hereby give you one random example; Let us take stanza 42 in Völuspá. I have taken the liberty to translate the stanza directly from modern Norwegian by professor Ludvig Holm-Olsen to English. Why? Because most, if not all, modern translations by scholars are really poor, in fact close to childish. Holm-Olsen is a small exception in my view, but his work is only available in Norwegian.

First, the modern Norwegian translation of the original Norse text:

*"Satt der på haugen
og slo harpen,
gygras gjæter,
glade Eggter;
over ham gol
i galgetreet
fagerrød, hanen
som Fjalar heter"*

My English direct translation:

*"Sat there on the mound
and stroke the harp,
the shepherd of the Gygri,
the happy Eggter;
over him in the tree of the hung,
beautiful red, the rooster,
who's name is Fjalar"*

There are 66 stanzas in Völuspá. This is only one of them. It starts with telling of a sitting on a burial mound, striking a harp. Our ancestors did this, they visited the burial mounds of our ancestors, to reflect, to gain memory, divine memory, from previous lives. To be sitting on a burial mound and striking the instrument of Bragi (the god of poetry, inspiration - equivalent to Óðinn) - yes, it is Óðinn sitting on the mound, just like it is Óðinn hanging in the tree of life, given to himself by himself. Because, Óðinn is all your accumulated ancestors - in you!

There is no wonder that another kenning of Óðinn is the sheperd, nor that he is the shepherd of the Gygri, because the Gygri is a Troll (Jötun), an avatar of the placenta, the She-Bear, the witch etc. The meta physical, the blood memory - it stems from the same.

There is no wonder that another kenning of Óðinn is Eggter - the happy shepherd. Another such shepherd of Trolls and Jötnar is of course Þórr, keeping them "in check" at all times. The name Eggter is, no suprise, related to the egg, the seed and the actual "battle". The myths with Þórr all tell of the same.

Then we have the beautiful blood red rooster, sitting and crowing in the crown of the tree above him. As the eagle sitting in the crown of Yggdrasill - representing the ancestral spirit flying out with the re-born - the blood red rooster represents the same. Yggdrasill, the terrible horse, "the vessel of the spirit" is an avatar of the placenta. But, the rooster also carries another significant symbolism related to the physical child and the physical birth as well. Hönir is equivalent to Freyr - the ancestor, the child, the seed, the light elves, the kin etc. Hönir is related to Lík (the physical body) - as the first of the other components being Vörðr, Hamr, Hugr og Önd (represented by the other respective gods - Óðinn, Vile and Vé (Óðinn, Lokí and Freyr, the spirit, the adrenaline and the physical body (inheritance)).

The blood red rooster (yes, you are "red" as a newborn) is crowing, the same way you scream when the sun rises symbolically - when you see the light again ("for the first time"), coming out of the womb with your accumulated ancestral spirit. The same way the rooster crows at every sunrise, the same way you scream every time you are born again. Every time you fall from the world tree screaming, taking up runes, given to yourself, from yourself.

If this was not enough, we learn that this blood red rooster is named Fjalar. We know Fjalar as a mythological dwarf. Besides being represented by metals, directions in the sky and well known physical things, the dwarfs are "uncompleted things". And, above all, they are black elves, namely your buried ancestors not yet re-born, dwelling in the soil (of black - away from the sun) with all their rich belongings. Back to Fjalar, there is no coincidence that this rooster is named Fjalar (or the dwarf in fact is the rooster) - because Fjalar together with his brother Galar killed the giant Kvasír. Who was this giant? Well, then we have to take a closer look at what the giant's name Kvasír means; "the best extract of all the gods". Yes, the dwarves killed him, and made the poetic mead from his blood, being the blood memory, the ancestral memory - the mead of the intellect, by the way; the same the fetus receives from the placenta.

Now, you would understand clearly that a child in fact is an "uncompleted thing", standing before life and initiations - and that both dwarves and "busy little bees" of course are related to young children as well.

I can go on and on.... From one single stanza in Völuspá...

"Vituð ér enn - eða hvat?"

Did the Vikings rape?

If you have been listening to your scholars, if you have ever been told anything about the Vikings in public school or watched any lie propaganda TV-show, you have been told that the Vikings first and foremost raped and looted. For some fundamental background information, please read this article first: The origin of our traditions and Christianity's influence on these.

As we know today, rape was the most dishonorable crime you could possibly commit in our Norse tribal societies. Such criminals were either outlawed (anyone could kill them without any consequence, to restore balance) or they were killed swiftly and placed in a bog (to be forgotten, and for hygiene purposes of the tribe).

Thus, we naturally have no sources of "raping Vikings". Not a single one. It is a huge paradox when all we hear from scholars is the eternal need for sources to even make a perfectly logical statement or conclusion.

[image omitted]

The Vikings, yes, they destroyed Christian scholars, monasteries and structures of harm and threat to the free pagan Scandinavia (and Europe). The Christians wrote it all down, but there is no record of any rape.

The St. Bertin Annals is the main source for the Vikings preemptive attacks towards the Christians - and it is not containing a single word of rape by the Vikings. The annals describe, however, two occasions of rape attempts. These two episodes involved the Christian Franks that raped (or tried to rape) a nun and two other women of high social rank. In all cases, the women fled to the Vikings for their protection.

That is all we have, amongst the sources for several hundred preemptive attacks towards the Christians, and some in detail.

And, if you want to read more about the Christians raping poor women, later protected by our honorable pagan ancestors, read the entire St. Bertin-Annals, and the commentary of J. Nelson, op. cit: 47 and C. Krag, op. cit. 1996: 11.

As we all know, the Christians wrote it all down. They wrote just about everything as downgrading they could about our ancestors. If there was one, just one "Viking rape" - be assured that they would have painted the annals and all their history books with it, from top to bottom.

The Wild Boars are coming!

This MSM headline from Norway is:

“Wild Boars in Norway - what now?”

[image omitted]

If you did not already know, man is not above Nature. The industrial scale agri farmers are screaming in fear, because their depleted civilized corn fields now face a new threat. The evil Boar that will destroy everything. Even your white loaf you queue up for at the concrete grocery store will be gone! Their imported Asian slaves will not be able to pick anything, because the evil Wild Boar will eat it all... The government must step in!

Wild Boars in Norway are nothing new. In the bronze age, the country was packed with Wild Boars from Trøndelag in the north and all the way down. Actually, the main source of meat in Rogaland and Hordaland was Wild Boar (the furthest west you can possible get, away from the continent).

Naturally, in this period of history, the climate was slightly warmer - actually more like southern part of France. We had more forest, more oak and leaf trees. Our neighbour in the east, Sweden, only had a very few Wild Boars only 15 years ago. Now, they are all over - walking and swimming across the border to Norway. In Sweden up to 200 000 Wild Boars are hunted every year, and the Wild Boar population is rapidly growing, and doubles every third year.

We are getting a climate more adjusted to the one we had in the bronze age, thus the Wild Boar is returning, and the leaf trees as well. We are in a cyclus of pre-ice age, and the ice age eventually will come.

As a Wild Boar hunter, as a Nature lover, a pagan, and as a dissident of the political man made climate change hoax - I could not be more happy with the ancient threats that lure around the corner. Our dear Battle Pig is back charging in the forests.

The multi ethnic and multi cultural Vikings

Not long ago some "esteemed scientists" from the Uppsala Uni made the groundbreaking discovery of a piece of clothing with embroideries. They thought one embroidery looked like a Muslim symbol, and made the conclusion that some Vikings for sure believed in Allah. They were in fact Muslims, they said. You can either choose to laugh or cry, because it sounds like a bad joke, but it is in fact a hostile one, and an attempt to lie for a propaganda purpose. For more about that specific case, read this [odelsarven.com] article in Norwegian language: Politisk "forskning" om Muslimske Vikinger.

Scientists today are worth nothing, and they prove it again and again. Scientists who have their paper published and their work credited, are agenda-driven. Always. Now, some new "scientific" reports were just released. They were just as stupid and blatantly biased as always. Here is one example of an article from the "groundbreaking results":

[image omitted; text recreated below]

INVERSE

Sarah Wells

9.16.2020 5:00 PM

Shutterstock

"THE HISTORY BOOKS WILL NEED TO BE UPDATED."

FAMILY TREE

VIKINGS MAY NOT BE WHO WE THOUGHT THEY WERE, DNA STUDY FINDS

HISTORY BOOKS TYPICALLY DEPICT VIKINGS as blue-eyed, blonde-haired, burly men sailing the North Atlantic coast to pillage wherever they set foot on land. While some of that may be true, a new genetic study of Viking DNA is flipping much of this history on its head.

In the largest genetic study of Viking DNA ever, scientists have found that Vikings - and their diaspora - are actually much more genetically diverse than we may have thought and were not necessarily all part of a homogenous background.

[end]

Some few samples have been analyzed, from the period before and under "the Viking era" or in what they call "the Viking world". Some articles sum up these results more biased than others - but the main red thread is;

History must be re-written! The Vikings were not blond! They were mixed! They were a multi cult gang from all over the world, south of Europe, Asia and what not!

First of all, you have to understand that science like this, and especially the media outlets that write about them are marxist sponsored. They have one main objective, and that is to de-construct everything ethnic and traditional that do not fit into the political narrative. Secondly, you have to use common sense. Only the dumbest of the dumb beleive this kind of blatant propaganda.

Ethnic Skandinavians (yes, those who actually come from Scandinavia) have an overwhelming physical presence of blond hair (light, dark, ash, dirty shades of blond) and blue eyes (steel blue, dark blue, grey). I remind you, ethnic Skandinavians TODAY have these traits as the absolute majority.

So, then you are suppose to believe what the scientists and the hostile media are telling you: That Scandinavians only 25 generations ago were mixed and in general did not look like ethnic Scandinavians do today? That our traits, being non-dominant, have changed from all dominant to non-dominant in under 25 generations? We suddenly went blond and blue eyed?

This is simply not possible. The headlines are laughable. And, the agenda is clear as day. If dark hair and brown eyes were a normal thing in Scandinavia a thousand years ago (even a noticable portion of the native population) - I have news for you: We would probably all have dark hair and brown eyes today.

If one should recommend any relevant education of any formal type, I would suggest to pick out a basic biology book written before the religion of relativism and multi culturalism. But, I warn you - you can be offended. Just like matemathics, it can sound racist...

Timelessness and Eternity

Why is it so - that modern humans struggle to understand our myths and fairy tales? Well, there are several reasons for it, but one major and all-encompassing reason is our perception of time.

We will not explain the reasons for this accumulative lack of understanding here, but rather explain in which context our myths and fairy tales should be understood - and not at least in which context our forebears told and understood them.

So, what is time?

Is it a line from beginning to end? From Aldrdaga until Ragnarök?

Is it the parts of past, present and future?

What we can say, is that time is perception. We all have a perception of time. We can also make the statement that no modern human being can grasp the concept of eternity. The only perception of time we are able to really grasp is the instant. The only actual time for mortals.

If we pragmatically and theoretically try to define timelessness, it would be like if you had a stopwatch - a magic watch that could stop the world around you, and you could walk around in it, like in a paused movie. What you did in this case, was to go from the state of finite to infinite.

The only way you can stop the present is as an infinite - an immortal so to speak. You would not have a normal perception of time anymore. You would actually be able to perceive eternity.

Our myths and fairy tales are timeless. They are eternal. Like Mother Nature. Like outer space. Yes, they contain the perception of the instant in their entertaining format - but they all spin in circles and never end. They are above time, above the instant - and beyond our perception of it. The same way that Aldrdaga is Ragnarök and Ragnarök is Aldrdaga. The same way that you are your ancestors and your ancestors are you - in paused instant.

This understanding and perspective is crucial if you want to even begin to grasp what our dear European and Norse myths and fairy tales are all about.

In the core essence; it is what makes them pagan.

A thousand years of rain and The Thirty Years' War

The Thirty Years' War from 1618 to 1648 killed more than 8 million Europeans. A fratricidal war over facets and details of a foreign monotheistic desert religion.

This war occupied Christian ethnic Europeans with internal slaughter of their own for an entire generation.

At the same time, in a weakened Europe, in a Christian civil war, another head of the three-headed Abrahamic troll once again fortified itself in Eastern Europe, having been driven out of our continent a number of times, in the Europeans' struggle to liberate someone else's (the Jews) Holy Land and Temple in the Middle East. A new Monotheistic Abrahamic desert religion of the same origin was fortified: Islam.

The result of the ensuing wars in the Balkans, no further embroidery is needed.

Europe has been tormented and divided by this three-headed troll from before Julian in the 300s, and ever since Christianity emerged as a small Jewish sect about 2 000 years ago.

For our own part, the misery was initiated by Charlemagne's slaughter of the Saxons, which was the spark to the true resistance - the Viking Age. Then the Dark Ages with civil wars and decay followed, by the Judeo-Christian struggle against the renaissance, with book bonfires, witch-burnings, murders, philosophical purges and torment.

We have already had a thousand years of rain, and have fought the wars of others long enough. The troll still has three heads on the same body. Now the other head has protruded, in all its abomination.

No more brother wars!

"No wild animal is as dangerous for humans as Christians are to each other"
Flavius Claudius Julianus Augustus (331-363)

The Troll layers

It is widely discussed if the different deities, figures and creatures in our mythology, fairy tales, songs and culture can represent multiple things, events and processes on different levels.

There is hardly no exaggeration when we say that all native Norwegian children have been growing up with Trolls. In all shapes and forms. They are a big part of our culture, in art, in small or even big figures (handmade or bought) at the shelves in private homes and cottages. We see the Trolls out in our Nordic Nature, in mountains, stones, snow covered trees, hills, in foggy weather and winter storms. (No, not in scary "human shapes" for real, but at a more subtle level). We even have a known word for this sublime, grim beauty - namely "Trollske". It is a description of a state of mind. It is difficult to frame it with words, but it is the state of mind that artists like Theodor Kittelsen encapsulated in his drawings.

["Skogstroll" (a Forest Troll) by Theodor Kittelsen; image omitted]

Already now we understand that Trolls represent multiple things, on different levels.

If we take a look at the etymology of Norse - Troll, it is related to Ettin (Norse: Jǫtunn, Jötul etc.). The word relates to a "scary" creature, a devourer, a big eater. They can be greedy. They are primordial powers, often very strong and not very sophisticated. They are old, very old, and some even "all knowing".

They are Nature, wild and untamed. They are often "early versions" so to speak, the same way that dwarves are "uncompleted" things. Thus, the Trolls come in different forms and shapes, as Mountain Trolls, Sea Trolls, Water Trolls, Forest Trolls etc.

["Det rusler og tasler" by Theodor Kittelsen; image omitted]

When the water fills the crack of a mountain and shapeshifts to ice, nothing can stop its primordial strength. It will crack the mountain open, and demand its space... Like a winter storm can lead you astray, and take your life swiftly, if you do not adjust to it and outsmart it.

The Trolls are duality. They both help you and can swiftly kill you. They can be beautiful, but at the same time scary.

["Hulder" by Theodor Kittelsen; image omitted]

Huldra (a female Troll) in the form of a beautiful lady (with a tail hidden) will attract you and lure you into her cave. Yes, you will enter the realm of death...

Just like Nature's duality, the Ettin powers are also to be found in yourself, at a personal level. It can be recognized as greed, envy, gluttony, un-kindness etc. These primordial powers are not in sum evil per se, but necessary indeed, at a manageable level - balanced by the powers of the Gods. Yes, there is no coincidence that the Gods are related to these primordial powers, that their ancestors and even partners and counterparts indeed in many cases are Jötnar. There is no coincidence that Þórr (Midgard's Veurr, your willpower and loyalty, gravitation and deity for weather, wind and crops) in the myths fights for his life force, slaying Jötnar and gets re-born. Þórr is not only a personification of a human child, he is the same powers in you as well. There is no good or evil. There is only pagan balance.

["Trolldet som grundet over hvor gammelt det var" (The Troll that pondered over how old it was) by Theodor Kittelsen; image omitted]

The Trolls are "twins", connected to the Gods. They are the old Kings and Queens. They must be overcome by the Gods, by a new King or Queen. They are always outsmarted, fought and slain in our myths and fairy tales - and the eternal metals and items of their riches - the memory, the life force is achieved by their successors. Their "all knowing" memory is transferred, just like in the myth Alvissmál and others where Þórr enters the cave of an Ettin or a Dwarf, or when Askeladden (the Ashlad) outsmarts the Cave Troll and acquires the same.

Yes, you find the Trolls at every pattern of Nature, in yourself, in your quest for glory, in your fights for loyalty, kindness and modesty, in the meetings with others, in wild and untamed Nature with all its sublime darkness, beauty, dangers, horrors and mercilessness. The same way a newborn child has been fed by the devourer and ancestor in its cave, been fighting the primordial powers and replaced its old slain King, its ancestor and twin - re-born.

*"The Troll alone
takes sudden revenge;
the coward never"*

- Grettirs saga

Pagan Wisdom in the Dystopian Present

Modern civilization is dystopian. We live in a modern feyodal system, ever increasing peoples enslavement to it - with eyes wide open, in a zombie like state. The vast majority blindly trust the system and the regulators, uncritically allowing it to take control of every aspect of your life, your childrens life, and even your DNA in the present and thus for all foreseeable future - to buy ones false safety here and now for every threat and symptom caused by the same system. Safety for possible a few months, they say, just to reach the summit of misery... causing only acceleration of an ever crippled slave humanity, under the control of the few - going in circles of fear and propaganda, until all comply. Because behind the mountain top the politicians are telling us we are "soon" on top of, a new and even higher one will appear. This, in the biggest human experiment there is, and ever was.

In this extreme environment, modern medicine and big pharma are the returning Messiah and the Church of our days. "The new religion", with the same script, is chanted by the new priests; the scientists (those who comply) and politicians (mostly traitors). These are apparently the only saviours and hope for the masses - to "cure" all weakness, unsustainable continued life styles and secure the "modern human rights" via a DNA adjusted job passport proof - to still enable the boomer holiday and keep fueling modern unsustainable economics while tracking your every move. You get, in the short term, to enjoy travelling business and leisure in a way both Kings and peasants only could dream of in all human history. For you to have your "bread and circus" whilst the middle class perish (yes, that would probably be you). To make the 0,001% even more wealthy, and to herd the even more modified and domesticated, propertyless and minimum citizen salary cattle into the "sustainable development goals" of the all united nations. Yes, a small layer of green colour on the exterior, for your eyes to be tricked. The interior is bloody red - pure communism.

You will, if you do not comply and submit to their sick agenda, become an outcast. Well, we should all become just that. We should become a good neighbour, but a bad citizen. We should use our own minds and let Mother Nature take her course. We should let the mills of the Gods grind. Because, we know that their mills grind slowly, but they grind final. We know that if we cheat and take the easy way out in the present, we will be crushed under her grinding mill in the future. Merciless.

Our pagan, strong, honorable, intelligent, un-selfish, kind and moderate ancestors knew this. They survived far greater crises in the past, and they did not submit to tyrants. They did as the bees in the beehives, they split the tribes when exceeding more than 150 individuals in their "uncivilized" scattered settlements and chose their own idol leaders. Let us remind ourselves of their wisdom and virtues, with only a few extracts of what is the reason that we are still here.

The quotes are taken from the Norse Eddas, sagas and the European Pagan philosophers of antiquity.

"It is better to fight and fall, than to live without hope"

*"It is better do die with honor,
than to live in shame"*

*"It is better with a swift moment of honor,
than a life in shame"*

*"It is better to go out and fight,
than to be burned inside"*

*"The coward thinks he will live,
if he avoids the spear,
but the age will give him no peace"*

*"If you sense evil,
take it as that;
and never give the enemy piece"*

*"Courage is better,
than the might of the sword;
a brave man
can always win victory
with a blunt blade"*

*"Courage is better,
than being discouraged;
better is happy,
than being grumpy;
whatever your fate might be"*

*"The guess of the wise,
is the truth"*

"The overrated, are the biggest deceivers"

*"Hard words,
break no bones"*

"Stubbornness brings either more humiliation or greater honor"

"A wise man does everything in moderation"

*"Let the wounds of others,
be your warning"*

*"A small home is better than nothing,
with two goats and a roof,
you never have to beg"*

*"For your friend,
you should be friend,
and for his friend;
but for a friend of an enemy,
no man should ever be friend"*

*"If you have a friend,
and think well of him;
seek him up,
the weeds grow,
and the gras stands high,
on unwalked paths"*

"Visit a friend invited, but uninvited if he is in need"

*"Something so unwise
you should never do,
than to argue with a fool"*

*"Waste not three words
arguing with a fool;
the wise gives in,
when the dumb strikes"*

*"Never make shoes,
or handles for weapons,
if it is not for yourself;
if the handle is skewed,
or the shoes too small,
unfortune is upon you"*

"Brave and generous men live the best"

*"Wealth is gone,
by a blink of an eye;
it is a wobbly friend"*

*"Death smiles to us all,
all you can do is to smile back"*

"It is not death you should fear, but that you do not start living"

*"The value of a man,
is no greater than his ambition"*

*"Whatever you do,
do it with all your force"*

*"The cowards die,
many times,
before they die"*

"There is only one way to happiness, to not worry of things that are beyond your control and will"

"It is not what happens to you that matters, but how you react to it"

*"Defend what belongs to you at any cost,
do not desire the belongings of others"*

"Only a fool would pray to the Gods, for things he can accieve himself"

"Is freedom anything else than to live as you wish?"

Nothing else"

*"Tolerance and apathy,
are the last virtues of a dying society"*

"Inequality is to make everything equal"

"Nothing in the business of humans, is worthy anxiety"

"Science is nothing else than an opinion"

"Ignorance towards the men of antiquity, is to stay in childhood all our days"

"Ignorance is curable, stupidity not"

"Lies travel faster than truth"

"The mills of the Gods grind slowly, but they grind final"

"Death is often the best healer"

"The Gods give nuts to those without teeth"

"The Gods help those who help themselves"

Norðvegr and the first Globalism

Few know and are aware that we have had what historians call a civil war in Norway, stretching over hundreds of years. The same historians claim that the main three areas of the country fought against each other due to theories as famine, battle for resources, land and petty pagan Kings waging war against each other almost as a tradition in of itself. Is this even remotely true? Is this the whole explanation?

Before Christianity arrived with brutal force to our lands, conflicts between Kings were rarer. The conflicts exploded during the forced Christianisation and accumulated further in the years to come. Before this period, decisions were made locally by elections and selections – processes supported by the smaller local tribes. The conflicts internally emerged after the pagan principles were left behind, or rather forced away for a new authoritarian foreign rule. The conflicts emerged when Kings inherited the Throne by blood, and not elections, selections, and processes with tribal support.

The conflicts arose with Christianity and when the sell out Kings started to become imperialistic, when they started a new tradition in taking several wives besides the Queen (Norse: “friller”) – out of strategic means and to control, expand and accumulate more power. This continental “custom” was adopted in the early years of Christian influence amongst corrupted Kings. Their sons (which were many, with different women) – fought among each other to claim the Throne, and this was an inevitable result, and brothers waged war against each other.

This degraded form of inheritance of Kingdoms resulted in a practise where two or more brothers could rule the same Kingdom. This was a compromised form of rule we have several examples of throughout the Middle Ages. The allodial pagan laws were not compatible with the Almighty Christian King with “powers” directly from the Christian God – and thus, we got a practice that in its essence was a compromised form, a “little of everything” – ideologized by a foreign religion, resulting in brother wars and tribal wars. It resulted in what is known as a civil war, over several hundred years.

We know very well that this were no times of general famine, lack of resources or other external factors that resulted in these conflicts and civil wars – other than religion, corruption, and the catholic church (Rome’s) power grab through the Kings in Norway. It is the same story we see today – with our present “Kings” and “politicians”, and what we call “globalism”.

The civil unrest and the old Kingdoms had been laying in accumulating conflict with each other and as well internally within themselves for over a hundred years – a period of meaningless crusades to “free Jerusalem”, spilling Norwegian blood on foreign soil for the new Jewish religion. This is the same insanity we see today, when our resources are used and our soldiers fight under the Internationalist UN/US, for the exact same foreign powers and “religion”, disguised as something “good” and for your own safety.

[image omitted]

The Norwegian King Sigurðr jórsalafari arrives in Konstantinopel on his crusade, after crushing all the Muslims on his way there. Sigurðr shared the rule of the Kingdom of Norway with his brother Eystein, that took care of the domestic business at home.

When the domestic division was at the deepest after the forced Christianisation, the Pope in Rome sent in Cardinals and Bishops from the year 1152 and established the archbishopric. In these times, this would today be the same as establishing an actual new nation, and a total internationalization of our lands, a serf-province of the Christian world – directed from Rome. This was the Jewish Cult Internationalist’s “divide and conquer” in a textbook manuscript. It made Norway a little chip in the international game. The Kings lost their positions, or rather the little that was left for them, and the local ability to rule and decide locally deteriorated. The church accumulated not only land and properties, but also implemented heavy taxation (at the time 1,5 grams of silver per household) directly to the Pope-seat, in addition to land confiscations as the means for taxation of everything produced, whilst exploited by the new order, in a feudalistic religious model. From here, the story goes on to the same tune – up to this very day.

The present religion is modern science, modern medicine, climate change – the new world order in the shape of “Agenda 2030”. The agenda has always been the same; to exploit you, disarm you, strip you of freedom, property, and independence and make you all dependent of the ruling authority. Our “Kings” and “decisionmakers” are still sitting around the continental and international “tables” of “elites”, betraying their people and selling out their homelands – upon receiving the same “grace” and corrupt gifts and positions.

Little has changed. When you know the script, you can predict the future.