The Best of The ShieldWall Network and The Roper Report

An Update to, and including, 'The Balk'

by Billy Roper

What people are saying about 'The Balk', the precursor to this book:

-“I'd never really seriously considered balkanization on US soil prior to listening to a podcast with Mr. Roper and then reading his book.

The book is obviously for someone who has already had a racial awakening. The author doesn't take the time to explain in baby talk why these people are different from us and incompatible with us. Instead he skips ahead a few chapters and tells you what's going to happen as a consequence of these different ethnic groups being forced together. It's not a matter of whether or not we like it, this IS how it's going to be and we need to calmly and rationally take an objective look at what is just right around the corner and prepare for it.

Aside from being educational and important, it is entertaining at times. It is full of awesome anecdotes and analogies such as, "When their backs are to the wall, our enemies tie sharp rocks to the end of sticks. When our backs are to the wall, we split atoms". Somewhere, William Luther Pierce is grinning from ear-to-ear at the author Billy Roper has become.” –Curt Beasley

-“THE BALK is the obvious result of much research. While it is filled with some surprising information, facts and figures, at no time did I find it "dry". On the contrary, the facts are presented in such a way that I could not put THE BALK down until the last morsel was consumed. I recommend this book for anyone who is interested in changes which are happening all over this country. This book deserves a 5 STAR rating, and I would highly recommend it to anyone who cares about the future of our nation.” –Rita Hyde

-“I do not personally know Billy Roper but have corresponded with him online and proudly display his books on my bookshelf. After reading his books, I can tell we have read many similar books and have a very similar worldview. This was yet another wonderful book written by him and I will continue to support his writing efforts.

This is a book that every White man and woman should read and be prepared for what is coming. Everyone likes to think that their generation is the most important one yet which I have heard on a radio show before and agreed with and it is reiterated in this book. Some people think we do not need to worry about White survival and our race and think all the White racial groups are silly especially in hindsight. It is easy to think that in hindsight but in reality they were just as important then as they are more important everyday. Everyday we are further along toward the abyss and the world is becoming more darker, dismal, and depraved.

This book is very easy to read yet extremely important. It is like an update and better version which I think is easier to read for the average person than 'Civil War Two' by Thomas Chittum. I really enjoyed this book and I am very glad fate brought me to corresponding with Billy and reading his books. There is no doubt in my mind that every day we are closer and closer to Balkanization and it is in fact coming. Do yourself a favor and read this short yet concise book and make plans not just for you but for your family and the survival of the White race.” –Michael Jeffrey

Introduction:

Let me ask all of you reading this a question. Has the United States become more united, or less united, over the last three years? That's our focus in this book.

Time has a way of flying by when you're doing a weekly internet radio podcast, writing daily articles for a couple of websites, and running a White Nationalist preppers and political activism organization. Sometimes it feels like you don't spend enough time with your wife and wee one, as it is.

In the intervening era since The Balk first hit bookstore shelves I've cranked out several other works: General Population, Remnants, one nonfiction called The Big Picture, Déjà vu, Commonwealth, and The Fifth Horseman. I always keep coming back to the pervasive themes explored in it, though, as my driving passion and interest. But in fact, the Hasten The Day trilogy has been republished as a single volume anthology, and all of my books have gone into second editions through a new publisher.

So much has happened since I wrote The Balk in the summer of 2015, nearly three years ago, now. Trump's election has further polarized and divided the United States into radicalizing extremes against a shrinking middle. The possibility of a civil war and the breakup of the nation is higher now than it was when I first began to document the ongoing internal migrations going on as people sort themselves out by race and vote with their feet. All of the trends I discussed then have accelerated since. As this book will show, more and more people know from which direction the wind is blowing.

Nearly every week during that time, sometimes more often, I have either written an article documenting the ongoing balkanization process, or featured a piece by someone else who notices what is happening and isn't afraid to say so. Most of those have ended up on either the ShieldWall Network or The Roper Report websites. I've also talked about each and every signpost along the way to the now inevitable breakup of America into smaller and more homogeneous ethnostates, which is where the title of the compendium comes from, on The Roper Report podcasts, currently carried on Radio Aryan.

EthnoState

You cannot easily convey the spoken word into a book, nor translate memes and brief internet essays into an extended textual format, but I felt that it was important that our people who aren't online (yes, there are some) could get a taste of what has passed since The Balk was published. Rather than having been proven wrong, all of my predictions have been supported by subsequent events. If anything, the self-segregation has obviously sped up, even before the 2020 census is available to show us by just how much, demographically.

I so firmly believe that we are closer to balkanization now than we were in 2015, in fact, that I have begun since then The ShieldWall Network, designed to encourage our people to become persons of influence in their local communities in preparation for the vacuum of power at the federal level. I wanted to create an organic community of like-minded Whites who know one another in person, offline, in real life. This is all in preparation for The Balk. I believe in it so much that I've taken my own advice and moved even deeper into the Ozarks, to a county which is 96% White and where every adjacent county over 90% White. We bought a few acres on a secluded mountaintop off the pavement. We're believers.

In editing the articles to use for this project, I attempted to be very selective. First, I only wished to use sources written between August 2015 and the present, by me, but even that proved too voluminous, so I chose to leave a year's gap, if you will, and only include material actually created since 2016, with very few exceptions. Secondly, I wanted to try, as much as possible, to edit out redundancy and repetition. Thirdly, I wanted to give the reader a feel for perusing the articles in their original context and setting, as originally intended.

My inspiration for this update compendium was Dr. William Pierce's famous The Best of Attack! and National Vanguard. However, my intent was to keep the articles which I selected more tightly focused on the themes of balkanization and the emerging ethnostates. As you progress through this collection, I trust that my more astute readers will recognize the method to my apparent madness.

These articles are not presented in chronological order or by website of origin, but rather are grouped by topic in a growing narrative to reinforce the previous pieces into a cohesive and coherent picture of the growing inevitability of America's doom as a multiracial empire. In order to insure this narrative flow in many cases articles are merely excerpted, without their title in some instances. Additionally, the originally unique font sizes and styles and paragraph structures have been altered but maintained in order to show the tone and flow of the voice, and to indicate changes in subject. All of them may be found in full on either The Roper Report or The ShieldWall Network websites. If it sometimes becomes difficult to distinguish one article from another as the conversation's dialogue grows, good. That's my intent. This is the presentation of a consensus. That's what echo chambers do.

Reading through two years of my own writings allows me a certain perspective we often miss in the information flood of the white noise, 24 hour news cycle. While my vision has remained gratifyingly consistent and clear, events have forced me to accelerate my time table. I now believe that the 2020 election could well be the last national election which the United States sees, and I don't think I'm engaging in too much hyperbole by saying that. I know that we'll find out, soon enough. So, whether you've read The Balk before, or heard any of my podcasts or read any of my writings at all, I hope that when you've finished reading this collection you will be convinced enough to do what is needful for you and your family.

Get out of the cities, away from diversity. Move to a place where you are the majority, and you're not surrounded by nonWhites. Make friends, go to local meetings and functions and festivals, and become a part of your community. They will need you for what is coming. And you will need them.

My vision of a future White ethnostate may differ from yours. That's fine. We will probably have several you can choose from, assuming that travel is an option. I don't, as you will see, obsess overmuch with the policies and governance of the future ethnostate, as much as I do their likelihood. I suggest you read this book with an open mind to our people's future. With that advice offered, by all means, proceed. At the end of this 'Ethnostate' sequel, you can read the original 2015 edition of 'The Balk', uncensored, for background information you have not yet had an opportunity to.

Chapter One

Recently, I was asked how we should handle multi-generational poverty among our own people, especially when it leads to governmental dependence.

Let me preface my response by saying that, rich or poor, I love my people. And, my empathy for poor Whites is especially strong, because I grew up among them. For most of my own life, despite my educational level, I have been working class myself, due to my choice to place my political and racial cause above gaining and maintaining a high paying job. I've been a mortgage broker and a school teacher, an armed security guard and a ditch digger, an office manager and a meter reader, a groundskeeper and a fundraiser for charities, a professional racial activist and an author. I've never been wealthy. On the contrary, my heart is with those of our people who are struggling.

First, not all poor Whites are dependent on the government. If we think of areas such as the Appalachians and the Ozarks where there are indeed significant numbers of impoverished Whites, we notice specific patterns: local job markets dominated by a handful of megacorporations such as Tyson Foods, the world's largest meat producer, and its subsidiaries. Tyson Foods imports illegal immigrants from Mexico and Central America who work for very cheap wages, undercutting the job market of the meat packing industry, which used to pay a living wage. The glut of labor drives down incomes in the entire local economy, where most consumer goods are at a nationally undifferentiated fixed rate. That having been said, the lower per capita violent crime rate in impoverished White areas in comparison with nonWhite areas is a clear indication that poverty itself is not a cause of violent crime.

EthnoState

Secondly, the Federal government supplying WIC and Food Stamps and even limited incomes to those who are unemployed, as well as federal social security disability for a variety of real and imagined mental, emotional, or physical ailments, creates a counter-incentive to working and independence. Living on government assistance is addictive. Speaking of which, the methamphetamine and opioid crisis has now overcome alcoholism as increasing causes of disability and death among impoverished Whites, a phenomenon often noted among displaced and disenfranchised peoples around the world.

Thirdly, there is a genetic factor. Sometimes, but not always, multiple generations of dysgenic or even interfamilial reproduction have created individuals who are of low intelligence and genetic quality. In the eternal discussion of nature vs. nurture, sometimes negative attitudes about education and achievement are passed down from the parents to the child and accepted by outsiders as being inherited rather than learned behaviors. Other times, the slack-jawed, prominent eared, jughead rawboned Celtic look of the too-isolated Scotch-Irish mountain folk is obviously inherited, and with it psychological and intellectual handicaps. Our people as a whole really have become dumber over the last several generations through the removal of the Natural Selection winnowing process, another effect of government aid. There is sometimes a correlation between inherited IQ and hyperconsanguinity, as well as economic achievement.

The solution to all of these problems afflicting impoverished Whites is a National Socialist government which will put those capable of working to work as productive and contributing members of society earning their own keep. Those who are marginally employable but not capable of progress through education can still be provided with menial labor opportunities which will allow them to be self-sufficient once the labor pool supply is diminished by the deportation of all nonWhites. This will occur through public works projects and military service employment, as the most impoverished areas of our ethnostate will need the most engineering related labor to improve and upgrade its infrastructure, and our borders will certainly need defending and expanding. The third class, those afflicted with genetic deficiencies, will be gradually reduced from the new society through both positive and negative eugenics. Those of high genetic quality will receive financial incentives to have more children, while those with nonbeneficial inherited traits will be compensated for having fewer children, or indeed, in the worst cases, for receiving permanent vasectomies and tubal ligations. Over time, they will naturally become virtually nonexistent.

No White children will go hungry. Our elderly will be honored, respected, and provided for. No White man who wants to work will be idle, and no White man will be idle who can work. In the coming ethnostate there may still be income inequality, as we are not at all Marxists, but virtually all of our people will once again become self-sufficient and contributing members of society, with the pride and sense of achievement which comes with earning one's keep.

North of the Boston end of the Atlantic seaboard megalopolis, the overwhelmingly White areas of upper New England make a natural ethnostate seedbed. With a regional culture entirely their own, combining the vestiges of Puritan stoicism and New England independence and stubbornness, New Albion is organizing for the future which we all see coming, in post-Balkanization America.

In his recent “Radio Free Northwest” broadcast of October 5th, 2017, Harold Covington discusses ‘The Advertising Expertise of the Alt Right’. Most interesting to readers of ‘The Roper Report’, though, is Stephen Landser and Lord Goyhammer’s ‘Race and Nation’ podcast discussion, which is repeated in this broadcast. The gentlemen, in response to Covington’s explosive Brandenburg series, talk about the inevitable reality of the Balkanization process, and that there will almost certainly be more than one White ethnostate emerging in its aftermath. They specifically talk with great clarity about what has come to be called the “Ozarkia” option, and correctly point out that Covington and Roper’s visions of future White ethnostates are not mutually exclusive nor even necessarily competitive visions.

EthnoState

Not only are they correct, but there may even be other large White enclaves which would be sustainable after Balkanization, at least for the short term, such as the Florida panhandle and southern Mississippi, even though both are surrounded by nonWhite territory. Eventually, corridors connecting them to larger White territories could be cleared, or in a worst case scenario, population exchanges could be arranged between the contentious ethnostates. 100,000 black survivors from besieged Chicago after the Midwest has been cleansed, for example, may be traded for an equal number of White refugees from New Afrika. The devil will be in the details. It worked reasonably well in the former Yugoslavia following their civil war in the 1990s, though, in a much smaller and more crowded area than we have to work with in the United States. Some of the White ethnostates, such as Ozarkia in northern Arkansas and southern Missouri, and the State of Franklin in eastern Tennessee and Kentucky, may eventually merge, once the nonWhite territories dividing them (Memphis and the Mississippi River Valley) have been cleansed. Likewise, the Upper South of northern Georgia and northern Alabama.

Whenever people talk about the coming Balkanization of America, one paramount concern is always our future White nation not being landlocked, despite the fact that being landlocked hasn't been a deal-killer for Andorra, Armenia, Austria, Belarus, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Macedonia, Moldova, San Marino, Serbia, Slovakia, or Switzerland. Indeed, being landlocked might be preferable than facing the Pacific Ocean, which in a Balkanization scenario would quickly become a Chinese lake without the U.S. Navy on duty. However, a New Amerika centered in the Heartland would have access to the Atlantic Ocean, and our European kinsmen for trade and commerce, via the Great Lakes seaways, as well as through the several deepwater ocean ports of North Texas, in the majority White coastal territory north of Houston.

Likewise, one should consider not just the demographics, but the cultural and political leanings of the native population. Is it more feasible to have an ethnostate in an extremely liberal area, or an extremely conservative one? In this regard, there is a stark contrast between the Pacific Northwest and Ozarkia.

The Balkanization Preparedness plan for Ozarkia, as outlined in The ShieldWall Network's platform, consists of encouraging Whites from our neighboring states of Louisiana and Mississippi, as well as southern Arkansas, to move north, as many of them are already doing through White Flight from those darkening states. Then, we have a plan to teach them how to become persons of influence in their new communities through volunteerism, civic activism, and political participation on a local level. City councils, school boards, veteran's organizations, Republican county committees, local and county law enforcement, and county elected offices are all vulnerable to influence and realignment from the grassroots up. ShieldWall Network affiliates are taught how to infiltrate conservative organizations and environments and from them, to cherry-pick and radicalize those Whites most amenable to a true White Nationalist message. Thus, when Balkanization occurs, control of local and regional territories, along with their populations, resources, and assets, will be under the control of people who will be guided by our voices and influence. In the vacuum or abdication of power at the federal level, all politics, and all power, will revert back to the local level. That will be us, in our zones of influence, which are being established now through The ShieldWall Network.

In addition to Ozarkia, the product of The ShieldWall Plan, and New Albion in upper New England, and the Northwest Front's Pacific Northwest call, there is a seedbed White ethnostate organizing for the coming balkanization in the Appalachians, called The State of Franklin. Centered on East Tennessee, the surrounding areas also share a unique and uniting regional culture and demography which is coalescing into a groundswell of hardy, independence-minded local activists. The organizers of the ShieldWall Plan have met and conferred with the Franklinites, and look forward to working alongside them in the future.

Johnny Fontaine: “...Oh, Godfather, I don’t know what to do. I don’t know what to do.

[Don Corleone stands up and shakes Johnny.]

Don Corleone: [shouting] YOU CAN ACT LIKE A MAN!!!!

[Don Corleone slaps Johnny.]

Eight years of an Obama presidency have not healed America’s racial divide. Many well-meaning liberal Whites voted for him, once or twice, not just for the novelty of electing our first (half) black to the oval office, but because they fervently hoped that doing so would placate the continually more grabby and entitled lower primate dindus by ‘proving’ just how non-racist we all were, collectively. Well, it didn’t work. Like the greedy pushers given an inch and demanding a mile which they are, obsolete farm machinery are now more uppity than ever. America is more deeply divided, racially, than we have been in living memory. All of the affirmative action hiring programs, minority set-asides for college admissions, and specific classes and even universities, magazines and tv channels, congressional caucuses, and racially specific organizations aren’t enough for them. Decades of racial integration enforced at bayonet point and indoctrinated into kids in government-run brainwashing mills haven’t succeeded in providing them with a Marxist equality of outcome. So, now they want segregated college dorms, classes, even communities, again, and more, their own black homeland, in the southeastern U.S.. They are undertaking an organized effort to move there, en masse, and take over the local, county, and state governments, just as Hispanics are doing in the southwestern U.S.. That’s them doing it, not because evil racist White supremacists want them to, but because they want to.

When I was a young man in College Republicans as an undergrad, I worked as a volunteer for totally cucked flagellant Mike Huckabee, on his failed 1992 U.S. Senate campaign. If you want to know what the atmosphere was like in his campaign headquarters as the results trickled in from far-flung precincts, watch the bunker scene from ‘Downfall’. A quarter century later, some folks still haven’t accepted the fact that we’re not going to be able to vote our way out of this mess. The house always wins.

EthnoState

For all of our lives, the news and entertainment media has been controlled by a very motivated anti-White tribal minority determined to diversify our nation. They've skewed elections through what they cover, how they cover it, and what they don't cover. When they can't use mass hysteria and virtue signaling suggestion to push a particular candidate and issue just like a marketing firm pushes a product, they simply buy candidates, through very straight-forward campaign contributions, and more subtle bribes. They destroy through scandal and approbation those whom they cannot buy.

I'm not black-pilled. I'm not discouraged. Why? Because this is a GOOD thing. Follow me, here.

They've always miscalculated, over and over again, and as Shakespeare wrote, been "hoisted on their own petard". Our enemies aren't omnipotent or omniscient. They are a divided coalition of nonWhites, sexual deviants, and weak-minded altruists spear-headed by homogeneity-destroying Jews who know that they're much less likely to be pointed out as the 'other' and pogromed yet once again in a multiracial society. But their efforts to undermine tradition and support the counterculture for camouflage have ALWAYS created a backlash against them, eventually. They get too cocky, their hubris turns to chutzpah as their contempt for the goyim grows, and sooner or later they just don't care to stay hidden any longer. They make mistakes. Instead of using shabbos goy frontmen, they have their own serve as Chairmen of the Federal Reserve Bank for four decades, continuously. They get caught coaching "focus group" participants of supposedly undecided voters after a debate. Their conspiratorial e-mails get hacked and leaked. Internecine warfare breaks out between them. Sooner or later, they put parentheses around their own names, for us. How very helpful of them. And that is a good thing for us, because over the last few Presidential elections, more and more White Americans have come to understand something crucial, something that is our responsibility to teach and reinforce. This is what we should do, now. This is the meme we should advance: the system is irreparably broken. The government is irredeemably corrupted. Just as our Founding Fathers discovered hesitantly and begrudgingly, but came to accept around 1770, we can no longer petition the government for a redress of grievances. There is no further solution available through the ballot box.

It's not just that the electoral college, a bulwark built against mob rule, is specifically designed to circumvent the will of the majority of the voters. It's not just that, from the Founding Fathers' original intent, stated very forthrightly in the Naturalization Act of 1790, and doubled down on again five years later, in 1795, that only Whites could be citizens of the United States, it's now been cheapened. That's right, U.S. citizenship has been cheapened to the point where any pregnant featherless biped that can waddle across the border and squat and poop out a mongrel maggot has automatically created a U.S. citizen, an anchor baby which will grow up to make its entire family "legal". Amnesty, in wave after wave, "common sense paths to citizenship", have made it so that it isn't even necessary for a hamster to be born in an aquarium in order for it to be officially declared a goldfish. Something that has been so cheapened, and so easily obtained, loses its value, as the Romans discovered in terms of their own rules of citizenship towards the end of their empire, too. It takes nothing but an accident of geography to be an American, so it means nothing much to be an American.

We have two possible futures left in America. One path leads to Yugoslavia, and the other, to Rhodesia. I would ask, challengingly, 'which one will it be?'. Perhaps that would motivate you to embrace the coming breakup of America. But you know what? I'm not even going to bother. There's nothing for you or I to choose. Nothing that I, or all of us together, could do, right now, would speed up the inevitable balkanization process by very much, any more than dipping our oars into the cold Atlantic seawater and paddling towards the iceberg would have caused the "too big to sink" Titanic to go down any faster.

Thomas Paine, one of the rabble-rousers most responsible for accomplishing what Samuel Adams said was the paramount task of a tireless minority necessary to win a revolution, i.e., "continuously igniting small brushfires in people's minds", once famously said to a fellow reluctant rebel who claimed to want peace that "if we must have war, we should have it in our own time, so that our children may have peace in theirs". Even up to the Continental Congress's initial meetings, many colonists desperately sought some kind of rapprochement with the King or with parliament. Eventually, grimly, most of them were forced to the hard conclusion that separation was necessary. Some, unable to bear the thought of disloyalty against their government, became Tories, or Loyalists, and fought for the King. Eventually, losing, these patriots, if patriotism is defined by loyalty to one's government, fled north, and became Canada.

Likewise, even the staunchest southerners promoting States Rights in the middle decade of the nineteenth century had no idea that the disagreement would culminate in another bloody civil war, this one leaving over 620,000 dead. It was a break which few on either side sought, driven by events and differences larger than any single man could bear the responsibility for, or potentially have prevented.

Only three percent of American colonists actually wanted revolution against their government when war broke out in 1775. The attempt to enforce gun control on the civilian population at Lexington shifted that. Similarly, only a small percentage of Whites, and a small percentage of blacks, and a small percentage of Hispanics, currently want complete racial separation from one another. Some Whites wish to expand their 'Pioneer Little Europe' concept beyond the community level, to encompass the entire Midwest, West, and Upper South to which White flight is ebbing from the southeastern and southwestern corners of a nation being overrun by nonWhites. Some Hispanics want to carry the eagle and snake flag in a reconquista of Aztlan from California to Texas, and are doing a pretty darn good job of displacing the Anglo population there. Some blacks, wanting to have control over their own destiny as a people and to be finally free of what they see as systematic and institutionalized racism, want five states in the deep south for their own ethnostate. Some crisis, natural or man-made, may tip the balance and the percentages on one of those sides or another, too.

And, really, would that be so bad? Is it not smugly condescending and paternalistic to not give African-Americans enough credit to believe they could manage their own society and government capably? Looking back at the history of slavery and Jim Crow laws and the perceived or real White privilege they are forced to contend with daily in a multiracial society, who can tell them that they don't deserve the opportunity to regain control over their destiny as a people, once again? Is it not racist to say that Hispanics don't have the right to their very own culturally dominant region, as well?

For the non-nation, multiracial empire which America has become, and for all of its distinct peoples, worse is better. What does that mean? Multiracial democracy does not work, even though, just like some people still insist that Communism is an ideal utopian system if it were just ran correctly, but human nature keeps messing it up, some idealists continue to be in denial of its failure. Those of us who live in the real world know that racism still exists. If anything, it has become continually more virulent, more open, more obvious over the last decade, than ever before. It, too, is an inherent, instinctive part of human nature. The only way to avoid conflict is separation. The system, the government, the establishment which works against separation, and which forces all of the subject peoples of the multiracial empire to live together, is not anything worthy to be preserved or protected. What is it that “conservatives” are trying to conserve, at this point? Yesterday’s liberal position? That’s about it.

The summer before last, my dad suffered a major hemorrhagic stroke. I was called to come to the hospital, and broke every speed limit between here and there, but for all intents and purposes, he was already brain dead before I got to the ER. He remained hooked up to a ventilator which breathed for him while we looked at his CT scans and consulted with neurologists. His prognosis was grim. He would never get any better. He would never awaken, or smile, or talk to me again. He would never get out of bed, and go to work, any more. He had just enough brain activity left to breathe on his own once every ten minutes, not enough to sustain life. After a long night of prayer and consultation, I made the decision to pull the ventilator. I chose to let him go, rather than trying to keep him alive like that, like a vegetable. The machines could have intervened and kept him breathing for another day or week or month, but as far as I was concerned, my dad was already gone. I pulled the plug, not because I hated him, but on the contrary, because I loved him. He wouldn’t have wanted to live like that. I loved him enough to let him go. I still don’t regret that decision.

Our Founding Fathers wouldn’t want America to live on like this. It will never again be the country it once was. We lack the will to deport fifteen million illegal immigrants, or defend our borders, or to defend the sanctity of unborn life, or the holy union of marriage. I love my country, but it’s already dead. Because I love it, I don’t want it to suffer a lingering, drawn out decay and death. I prefer a quicker, more humane end for America. I prefer that we pull the plug. It's an act of love for what our nation used to be, and necessary in order to make room for what is coming, our New America. It is the curse of greatness that we must step over dead bodies to create new life. We must cleanse the soil with fire, or it will never bear fruit. The government in Washington D.C. is not our nation. Congress is not our nation. The President is not our nation. The Supreme Court is not our nation. Our race is our nation. We are not defined by some imaginary, formerly defended line on a map. We aren't defined by a Constitution which is either ignored or purposefully misinterpreted in order to further enslave us. We are defined by our common blood. That's all that really matters.

It's not that I don't believe in Trump. I don't believe in multiracial democracy. I don't believe in America, any more. Not what it has become, irreversibly. Adolf Hitler himself could be running for President, and win, and he wouldn't be able to turn things around.

As President, Hillary Clinton would have moved to attack the first amendment by having her own left-wing Supreme Court appointees overturn the Citizens United ruling, then worked on federal hate speech laws, first by censoring online speech under the auspices of fighting online radicalization of potential terrorists, then by going after politically incorrect speech of all types. The second part of her one-two combination punch would have been to limit the second amendment by expanding terrorist watch lists to include those cited for hate speech violations, and denying them their second amendment rights, which those same liberal Supreme Court justices will have ruled doesn't apply to private citizens, anyway, by overturning the Heller ruling. Gun show loopholes and online loopholes won't even make the front page. We haven't really learned much from 1775, after all. At the same time, racial divisions will deepen as serious discussions of reparations for slavery, already demanded of the U.S. by the United Nations, begin. That may well be just what White Americans need to be 'woke'. Not all of them. Maybe not even most of them, at first. But, well over that historically magic 3% mark.

You see, electing a moderate, or even a sincere conservative, would only prolong the inevitable. Since every day the White percentage of the U.S. population decreases, from my people's perspective, the longer we put this off, like two adolescents circling, each daring the other guy to hit him first, the fewer of my people there are, and the less territory we will hold onto, eventually, as our new nation, which will be demographically back to the way the U.S. was around 1960. That is, at least 90% White.

Do you begin to see, now, why I say that ‘worse is better’? I know that some right-wing organization leaders who use multiple names and still seek some fantasy way of voting a particular region of the nation independent don’t like to hear it, but it’s the truth. Our future doesn’t lie in the ballot box, but rather in the bullet box. Right now, though, there’s nothing we can do to speed up the process, and nothing that the elites, even if they woke up, realized the avalanche they had begun, and tried to stop it, could do to put the genie back in the bottle, either. The only question is, “when?”.

In the bloody aftermath of the French Revolution, most of the Jacobins who had radicalized the population against the nobility and royalty in turn were swept away by the tide rushing forth from the guillotine’s blade. This wasn’t a fluke. Revolutionary movements tend to eat their own.

Egalitarianism promotes the leveling of all environmental influences. Just as (((Marx))) intended, instead of merely an equality of opportunity, the goal of liberal democracy is an equality of outcome. That means that nobody can have an advantage over anyone else. You can’t inherit wealth. (Estate taxes) All schools must be equal in enrollment and funding and quality of curriculum.

(Desegregation bussing) Nutrition and emotional support must be comparable for all. (Government dieticians and counselors) In short, egalitarianism, in the whole nature vs. nurture debate wherein it’s generally accepted that about half of intelligence is inherited, eliminates the other half, the environmental differences which affect IQ. That means, ipso facto, that egalitarianism increases the importance of inherited intelligence, when measuring human differences.

Wait, hold up, what?

Sure, eliminate or reduce the environmental factors which influenced intelligence through attempting to supply both an equal opportunity and environmental outcome to all from birth, and the hereditary factors which come into play before birth are even more important, relatively, aren’t they? Of course, there’s that awkward nine months’ time in the womb itself in between conception and birth when the fetus is influenced by telegenic reception of DNA from previous siblings or previous sex partners of their mom's, as well as what she eats and drinks and breathes and feels, and the hormones and other chemicals her body ingests and produces. But we already know that while IQ does change over time, counter-intuitively the heritable contributions don't decrease as we get older as one might think, they actually increase percentage-wise, because as we age we develop more independent thinking skills which free us from peer pressure or other environmental strictures that shape our intellect when we are young. We become more serious and disciplined. We are able to feed ourselves and look after our own health. We are less subject to our environments and so are our brains, our intelligence. This shows up when its quotient is measured.

Some far-thinking idealistic leftists are beginning to get that. That's why they are now focusing on the evils of White Privilege. It's not something you do, it's something you were born with. The only way to do away with White Privilege, ultimately, is to do away with Whites. The only way to do away with the increasingly important inherited aspect of intelligence, is to attempt to ameliorate genetic differences. Literally, to purposefully hybridize all of humanity into an indistinguishable gray mass. They want to level the playing field through dysgenic miscegenation. It's called social engineering through promoting race mixing. Counter-eugenically, controlled media news and entertainment, and financial incentives through jobs and grants and promotions, and politically through approval and advancement, all reward mixed race mongrel mutts, and penalize non-mischlings.

So what about the ultimate egalitarian-promoters? What about those who echo? Well, they certainly don't support diversity for Israel. Multiculturalism doesn't work there. They have a wall. They have a law of return. They have a racially based ethnostate. But what they also have, in the diaspora, is a growing level of assimilation and race mixing. It's even considered their greatest threat. That's right, not us, but intermarriage, that's what Jews fear most.

Jews have succeeded through the cognitive dissonance of strengthening their own group internal loyalty and solidarity while simultaneously undermining the homogeneity of their hosts to make sure they aren't recognized and singled out as the only minorities and pogromed again. Open borders, the counter-culture, feminism, gay rights, civil rights, are all tools the Jews use to weaken their hosts and create heterogeneous multiracial messes which they can hide in. They don't really believe in or want it for themselves, or at least they didn't...until they started getting high on their own supply.

EthnoState

That's why memes demanding diversity for Israel, as I led chants calling for outside the Israeli Embassy in DC a few times fifteen years ago, chaps their yarmalukes so much. That's why ads promoting Jewish women and black men together spins their dreidels. Oy, Vey, it stings. Almost as much as the Muslims which the Jews have pushed into Europe making Europe more anti-Semitic and forcing Jews to make Aliyah stings. Almost.

Like every parasite, and do be certain that that's what Jews are, parasites, eventually the host gets weak and sick and dies, and they end up eating their own. Just ask Harvey Weinstein and Charlie Sheen and Dustin Hoffman and Louis CK. They can no longer differentiate food from family.

Or, ask other Jews, the majority of whom outside of Israel marry outside of their race. Outside of the Orthodox communities, the rate is over 71%. Outside of Israel, their birth rate is close to 0%. The assimilation rate of Israelis living in the U.S. is 75%. Within a generation, as the world's aging Jewish population in America and Europe dies off and more younger Jews make Aliyah by moving back to their racist state, the majority of the world's Jews will actually live in Israel.

White Nationalists are rightfully concerned about the demographic future of our people. The reality is, however, that about the time America balkanizes and White ethnostates arise again, there will be far fewer Jews in North America and Europe, numerically and by percentage, than ever before. In fact, through natural aging, low birth rates, assimilation, and Aliyah, there may be almost no Jews remaining in White nations by the end of the 21st century. They will all be in Israel. Most likely this will encourage the geographic expansion of the Zionist state into Greater Israel, as their Jewish population is projected to double. We should still beware of mongrelized mixed-race and crypto-Jews who carry a half or a quarter of the serpent seed, certainly. But their power here will have been broken, along with their self-identity. And that's without us even having to fire up the ovens again.

Relying for so long on the Jewish diaspora for funding (directly as remittances and reparations, and foreign economic and military aid, and indirectly through impugning guilt over the Holocaust and donations from gullible Zionist Christians) and the benefits of espionage, Israel is not set up, psychologically, culturally, or politically, to survive as a truly autonomous state without its big brother to be a bully and fight its wars by proxy for them. Whether they can or will, remains to be seen. Either way, it won't be our problem. Once we've converted the Judeo-Christians to Christian Identists, the Jews will be on their own. And if the parasite tries to bite us again, we can stand back at a distance and turn them into a glass paved glow-in-the dark parking lot for the Indians with a dot.

Thank you, don't come again. 110 times was enough. You can eat your own.

Demographic statistics and shifting Census data indicate that growing political polarization, racial tensions, and the element of change in America's culture and society brought on by both legal and illegal immigration are all leading towards the Balkanization of America. Looting and riots. Culture Wars. A looming minority majority. What will this mean for your future, and for our nation?

Balkanization. Some of you may have read or heard the word before. To others, it might be new, and sound alien. One of those two dollar words used by politicians and lawyers or medical doctors. The kind of word you ignore, like the side effect warnings at the end of pharmaceutical commercials. Balkanization. It has a lot of syllables. It sounds kind of like it might be the root word for our term 'to Balk', a word meaning 'to hesitate or be unwilling to accept an idea or an undertaking'. That definition might be more appropriate to people's reaction to the reality and our imminent and inevitable future, but it's not actually the word we're looking for itself, or the correct definition. In the future, we might very well refer to what is going to happen in the past tense as 'The Balk', as verbal shorthand, but that will carry a different meaning, except for those who wish then that it had happened sooner. Words, of course, have objective, non -socially constructed meaning. They are symbols of their own origin, and within that linguistic DNA, hide the traces of their essence.

What, then, does 'Balkanization' mean? Let's break the word down. In origin, it comes from a reference to the Balkans, the area of southeastern Europe which, up until the 1990s, we referred to as Yugoslavia, for a while. Some of you might remember what happened there. If you do, hold onto that thought for a minute. So, Balkanization means, 'to become like the Balkans', in one sense. What, then, are the Balkans like?

EthnoState

Well, the Balkans have always been a divided and contentious area of the European continent, being at the cultural and religious crossroads of Catholicism, Orthodox Christianity, and Islam. The Muslim invaders made it that far, and got stopped, but they stayed, in the southern half of the region. Some of them today are the descendants of forcibly converted Whites. Some are of mixed, part Turkic ancestry.

Not inconsequentially, among the non-Muslim population, there is a further division between Alpinids of a central European type, like the Croats, and Slavs, of the eastern European type, like the Serbs. And, of course, lots of people who are mixtures of the three; Bosnians, Kosovoans, Hercegovians, even Albanians and Macedonians. These many groupings have often led to genocide, on both sides, even absent any other differences. So much for unity through diversity.

The Croats sided with Germany in W.W.II, and use the same alphabet as us, and are mainly Catholic. The Serbs sided with the Soviet Union, and use the Cyrillic alphabet. They are primarily Eastern Orthodox in religion. Both have their own spoken language, as well. They hate each other.

Pan-Slavism, by the way, the international effort to unite all Slavic people. was a major force behind the Serbian independence movement of one hundred years ago, which led to the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand of Austria. This event kicked off W.W.I when Germany backed up Austria and Russia backed up Serbia through the system of entangling alliances. W.W. I sowed the seeds of W.W.II, after which Yugoslavia became a Soviet puppet state. The history of not playing well with others is as sharp in the Balkans as anywhere in the world. Dr. Tomislav Sunic, a former Croatian diplomat, has written extensively on his nation's history, in that regard. Thomas Chittum, who served as a mercenary in the Yugoslavian Civil War on the Croat side, has written just as extensively about the lessons we should learn from that conflict in his seminal 'Civil War Two: The Coming Breakup of America'. Of particular interest in his work are the prophecies of what will happen in, and to, ethnic enclaves once cleansing begins.

History is full of multiracial societies which have always imploded into racial civil war and collapse, if they haven't eventually degraded through racial amalgamation. Those are the ONLY two long-term end results of multiracialism. The ONLY two choices. Just as the United States is more divided racially and culturally and politically than it has ever been since the last Civil War, the pattern we are now following is not unique. It happened in the Austria-Hungarian Empire. It happened in the Ottoman Empire, where Kemal Ataturk purposefully dismantled their multiracial state and downsized it into Turkey, following the first World War. Notice how the last gasps of that secularism died with the failed coup there this past week. It happened, even, to the Soviet Union. Multiracial empires are by definition unstable. Homogeneous states, where people share a common race, ethnicity, language, culture, and religion, by definition, are more stable. Diversity is not a strength, it is a weakness. Unity and diversity are antonyms, and antithetical concepts.

President Bill Clinton bombed Serbia during the Yugoslavian Civil War of the 1990's, because as a multiracial empire itself, those who rule the United States prefer to blame one specific side in any conflict: the Hutus rather than the Tutsis in Rwanda, for example, rather than recognizing and acknowledging that diversity is the cause of conflict. That's why Slobodan Milosevic faced war crimes trials. That's why we need a bad guy, always, to scapegoat, both internationally and domestically, whenever two diverse groups clash due to having markedly different interests and goals. Admitting that nature abhors multiculturalism even more than it does a vacuum would be very problematic for those singing 'Kumbaya' to their multi-racial subjects from Washington.

According to recent polls, not only do most Americans understand that our nation is more divided than it has been within memory, many also do not believe that the United States as we know it will still exist as one nation a single generation from now. For those whose heads are still in the sand, History is once again a willing teacher. The past is full of events, wars and revolutions, governments rising and falling, that very few would have predicted, shortly before they happened. Who would have thought that the Soviet Union would collapse inwards on itself without a single missile being fired, as recently as 1985? Or that the Berlin Wall would come down, without a shot? Of course, in the morning's light of hindsight, twenty-twenty vision often makes these changes seem to have been inevitable. So, too, will the collapse of the United States seem to those who survive it, once it has happened. Not two weeks ago, the leader of the New Black Panther Party suggested that blacks move to five specific southern states and take them over as new black homeland. A “New Africa”. Hispanics in the southwest are doing that, as we speak. They call it “La Reconquista”, and the new country, “Aztlán”. We are fortunate in having the prescience to see it coming, and as much as is possible prepare to position ourselves, physically and politically, to take advantage of the change which is on its way. The fall of multiracialism. The contemporaneous rise of racially specific mini-states in its absence. And one of them being, our new White republic. Our New America.

Back to the drawing board, to the original intent of our Founding Fathers in the Naturalization Act of 1790. Back to the future, as it were, through balkanization.

It may not have come directly from their shady offshore accounts, but morbidly obese fugly wildebeast Heidi “Hippo” Beirich, who seems to have sat on former SPLC queer jew muppet Mark Potok and squashed him into nonexistence, has helped get the founder of the New Albion White ethnostate $30,000 in start-up capital!

Beirich, a regular reader of The Roper Report website and listener to The Roper Report podcast, claimed that their tabloid fundraising group learned of the efforts by Tom Kawczynski to found a regional homeland for Whites in upper rural New England after the Jackman, Maine town manager’s articles and NewAlbion.org website were featured on The Roper Report. Revealing once again that the SPLC hates the founding principles and ideals of the United States, and despises our Founding Fathers, the rotund, semi-literate hack spewed that America’s Founding Fathers should never have held leadership positions due to their clearly stated (and enacted into law, such as the Naturalization Act of 1790) views on race and immigration.

The SPLC then waddled into the campaign to get Mr. Kawczynski fired from his job due to politically incorrect but true comments which he had made privately, NOT due to anything related to his job performance. Heidi hates Tom, because Tom holds the same views as America's Founding Fathers. She hated Mr. Kawczynski even more when it became clear that, unlike some high-profile people whom the motley collection of subgenius Jews, homosexuals, and other deviants have attempted to intimidate, he wasn't going to recant, crawlfish, or apologize. They REALLY hate a White man who stands his ground.

The extraordinary high number of hits and new traffic to The Roper Report must be attributable to Heidi the Hippo dropping Billy Roper's name so many times in all of the articles about the martyrdom of Mr. Kawczynski on the pillory of free speech, especially the Washington Post piece. Thanks, Bitch.

At today's city selectman meeting, Mr. Kawczynski's contract as City Manager of Jackman was terminated. Since the effort to have him fired by anti-White extremists shone such a light on the people who founded this nation's freedom of speech, even in their private lives, being curtailed by government and private employers, the city selectman agreed to pay Mr. Kawczynski $30,000 to please not sue them for firing him for using his first amendment protected right outside of the office he held.

What we now have, thanks to Heidi the Hippo, is an open public discussion of Whites being denied their freedom of speech by government and their employers, and another eloquent, outraged White Nationalist leader and spokesman who no longer has anything left to lose by being completely open and active, and thousands of new hits to The Roper Report website and the New Albion website. Oh, and $30,000. Did we thank the Bitch yet? Oh yeah. Thanks again, Bitch.

Keith Ellison, the Democratic Congressman from Minnesota who is second in command of the Democratic Party, is a full blown Black Nationalist.

That's not a bad thing. More and more blacks are realizing, as I told them in Memphis at the 'Rally For Forrest', that the United States of America was founded by literal White Nationalists, and created exclusively, of, by, and for White people. I'll try to find the interview where I asked one confrontational black reporter if she thought that the U.S. government was motivated and tainted by institutional racism. She first refused to answer on the record, with other reporters recording her, then she agreed that centuries of slavery, Jim Crow laws, and White privilege made it so, irredeemably. Why then, I responded, would you want to stay a part of it? Wouldn't you rather have your own nation where you can control your own destiny as a people, and promote your own interests, culture, and heritage?

You see, we don't want them. I wish that slavery had never happened not because it was evil, but because it brought them here. And, being mentally like petulant children, when they sense that a country club or a fraternity doesn't want them, or you don't like them, they don't respond like human beings. If somebody doesn't like me, I don't try to force myself on them and demand that they hang out with me. But they do, because they can't stand to not be petted and loved. They need it, psychologically, to salve their inferiority complex. That's understandable.

Some of them, though, are reaching that next "take my toys and go home" level of development, partly as a bluff to get White liberals to cower and beg them to stay with reparations and gibmedats, but partially because they think they really mean it. We should definitely encourage this idea.

I gave an extensive interview to Aziz of the Atlantic this past weekend which should be out soon, in which I talked extensively about the inevitability of the balkanization of America and the rise of ethnostates, and the many exciting attractions of a New Afrika, based on the demographic observations in my book 'The Balk'. You see, no single racial group in America can more "legitimately" claim that they need and, by God, are owed, an ethnostate of their own, than blacks. And once there is one, there will be the precedent for demands and justifications of others. Winner, winner. Aztlan for Mestizos? Sure. Let's carve up this turkey.

Imagine the beauty and justice of an independent black nation, unbound from the effects of unconscious bias and systemic inequality! No more racists to deal with. No more condescension or contempt to face. No more spelling tests or expectations of civility. No more high water marks of White social behavior held up as impossible standards. Free at last, Free at last!

Us, too.

Just as we in the ShieldWall try to present other rising White ethnostate regions such as the Pacific Northwest, the Appalachians, or Upper New England as potential alternatives to Ozarkia, some in the U.K. and Western Europe are considering a comparable migration to the Whitest area remaining on our Father continent.

Poland and Hungary have remained resolute in keeping out nonWhite migrants and refugees, despite the machinations of Merkel and the European Union oligarchs. Knights Templar International's 'Operation Ark', encouraging people to leave what they see as doomed Western Europe and the U.K. and get their families to Hungary, Poland, and Eastern Europe "...not for ever, but to escape the coming catastrophe and start breeding for the Reconquista".

One major consideration in building a regional ethnostate is that you want to try to avoid including any urban area with a concentrated population of over 100,000 people within your initial borders. If possible, you should also attempt to avoid including within your enclave any Federal military bases, ports, air stations, or depots. While this may sound counter-intuitive at first, because you don't want your population density to be so low that you can't defend the territory which you claim and you want to have access to the resources, military and otherwise, which Federal bases and cities have accumulated, you also should remember that cities and Federal bases will be defended by any remnant or rump Federal forces after a balkanization much more forcefully than rural areas.

Likewise, depending on the level of power vacuum and collapse which transpires, while some Federal troops may evacuate bases and desert or withdraw, others may set themselves up as local warlords, themselves, using their personnel and armaments. This could be through mutiny, or through local base commanders or their successors seeing themselves as the legitimate regional Constitutional authority. Remember how Arthur, after the legions withdrew, tried to maintain Roman civil authority in England? A neo-feudalism may arise around federal military bases, exchanging food and service and loyalty for protection, same as it ever was.

You would be well advised to behave like the Saxons, and control the countryside. The cities can depopulate through their citizens becoming refugees, which you can deal with piecemeal as they are filtered through (and hopefully don't overrun) your barricades, roadblocks, and territorial perimeter. Or, they can be starved through the withholding of imported food, water, and power until they capitulate. But bear in mind that most cities of 100,000 or more are the regional collective power centers for nonWhite populations as well as liberal White political forces, so you'll have to determine how best to deal with them: I recommend either exile or execution, for the nonWhites, and labor intensive rehabilitative reeducation programs, perhaps, for the White liberals. Models to follow are numerous, from the 'Trail of Tears' Cherokee removal to the West in the mid-19th century, to the ethnic cleansing of the former Yugoslavian states in the 1990s.

This morning, I received an e-mail from a gentleman who lives in Washington State. He's been reading my articles and books on the coming balkanization, and adapting the ShieldWall plan to other regions, as well as listening to my podcasts. He's a member of a regional ethnostate effort in that area, but saw no contradiction or conflict between working with them and becoming a part of the ShieldWall Network. I agreed with him, and have begun helping him develop his local community activism and grassroots organizing program there in the Northwest. At the same time, I have been able to forward a New England activist who may be an asset to the folks building New Albion in upper New England, and directed a couple of contacts in Appalachia to the State of Franklin organizers. In each of these areas, we are sharing ideas and learning from one another, then adapting what works to our own areas' particular culture and geography.

Overall, planners of a potential ethnostate should avoid biting off more than they can chew, realistically, in terms of territory, especially when it comes to large urban areas and resources which are high value to the Federal government. Build where you are strong. Plan on acquiring the means and resources to feed and supply yourselves and your neighbors, to absorb their loyalty. Then you can grow.

Chapter Two

In their typically snide Jewey attack on New Albion White ethnostate founder Tom Kawczynski, the B'nai Brith (meaning 'Brotherhood of the Circumcised', a kosher group originally founded to defend a Jewish factory owner who raped and murdered a young White girl and which then moved on to committing acts of espionage against the United States on behalf of Israel, inadvertently gave a boost to the Shield Wall Network and our observation of an emerging White ethnostate, Project New America.

The greasy hook-nosed kikes even stole two pictures off of The Roper Report website for their article.

With the 2018 mid-term elections coming up this fall, blue states are on track to become more deeply blue, sliding even further leftwards, and red states are looking as if they will turn even deeper crimson red, and edge further to the right. Each are reacting against the other. Both sides of the divide are radicalizing in their own stewing echo chambers. The Pacific Northwest and the Southwest, as they become even more liberal, will become more extreme in that, and in the upper South, which is becoming more conservative due to ongoing regional White flight from the darkening deep south which is going under nonWhite control, RINO Republican establishment politicians will be challenged by more populist right wing candidates in the primaries.

Both coasts will be fully Democratic, in all likelihood. In fact, far-left candidates will challenge moderate Democrats in blue state primary elections. Republicans will increase their hold on New America. What this new New York Times article describes is how, just as was prognosticated in Billy Roper's 'The Balk', this will lead to growing sectionalism in Congress as states ally themselves with other adjoining state House and Senate lawmakers in their neighboring region for their common interests against the expressed allied political interests of other regions of the country. More importantly, each of these regions will find that their interests diverge from the interests of the Federal government and the elite establishment in Washington, D.C., trying to hold it all together under a shrinking centrist foundation.

As ethnostates congeal and people vote with their feet to voluntarily move to areas where they are the majority, the snowball effect will create even more acceleration of the polarization, division, and ultimately the balkanization process. Things to look for: elected officials and Congressional candidates will begin speaking in terms of regional interests: "Midwestern values", "Heartland economic concerns", "Mid-American Culture", "Flyover Heritage", i.e., rather than national interests. Those will become euphemism for ethnostate interests.

What this means is that the crisis trigger scenario which creates a vacuum of power or the will to exercise existing power at the Federal level which will lead to the balkanization of America may not necessarily have to be at the zombie apocalypse or global nuclear war level. With Congress dividing along regional lines and sectionalism becoming a thin veneer for emerging ethnostate interests, it could all come unraveled due to a budget impasse, a recession, or a relatively minor immigration issue such as the latest round of amnesty, or a combination of the above. In other words, we may not have to go full Mad Max, before we get our ethnostate. It could happen through regional economic alliances and political confederations becoming formalized into de facto regional secessionist blocks of states. In such a scenario it would be even more important for our people to be adjacent to or already in local and County level positions of power and influence, in order to direct those state and regional platforms. This is the focus of the ShieldWall Network plan, Project New America.

EthnoState

The precedent for regionalism and sectionalism becoming the dominant force in Congress has already been well established. In 1856, Preston Brooks of South Carolina beat Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts bloody with a cane on the floor of the Senate. Northern Republicans and Free Soilers literally fist-fought with Southern Democrats during a legislative session in the House of Representatives two years later, with thirty Congressman joining the fray. Three years after that, the Civil War began.

The mid-term elections of 2018 will mark the beginning of the great divide, when America's polarization is reflected in our elected legislative representatives, and Congress becomes as divided as the country as a whole already is.

Whether the trigger for the breakup of the United States is an economic downturn, natural disaster, large scale riots, insurrection, an external war, or a secession movement by sanctuary states which the federal government simply lacks the will to forcefully oppose, the result will be a vacuum of power in some regions from the national level. State and local governments will become more autonomous, and in some cases completely independent. They will be free to form new alliances, or even desperate to do so.

When America begins to balkanize, some locations will invite in outside help. Large Chinese communities on the West Coast, from Vancouver to the San Francisco Bay area, and including the Pacific Northwest where they are the largest growing population, may invite in Chinese "humanitarian" efforts spearheaded by the Chinese military, which will generously offer to aid and assist there since the U.S. government will no longer be able to guarantee the safety of Chinese citizens living on the West Coast.

Further south, Mexican majority areas in southern California or in border states all the way to Texas may invite in Mexican army protection, or even Cartel forces, to provide security. If Canada is less affected, they may be asked to help by overwhelmed local officials in the Great Lakes region.

EthnoState

Perhaps of most concern to many Americans is the potential threat by United Nations “peacekeeping” troops. The good news is that they would likely prioritize their missions to secure the densely populated, diverse Mid-Atlantic region from Boston to Richmond. Megalopolis and other urban islands would be more than they could handle, as their experience trying to control the antagonists during the Yugoslavian civil war demonstrated.

In terms of thinking like our enemies do, what would be the mission goals of U.N. peacekeepers?

1. Controlling the national capitol, for the appearance of legitimacy in acting in concert with the rump state of the remnant federal government. Secondly, this also would allow the multinational forces involved free access to every remaining U.S. intelligence resource and asset, including every military and technology secret which the federal government maintained. Tertiary, regions still ostensibly loyal to the federal government would become tacitly under their control, indirectly, as well.
2. United Nations peacekeeping forces would graciously take into their protective custody stockpiles and deposits of precious metals and items of value from art to industry. Organized removal for safekeeping would outstrip individual looting by the peacekeepers themselves. Much of this would be shipped back home. The makeup of the U.N. peacekeepers, whether they were from the E.U. or from African nations, or from India or China, et cetera, would dictate where they ended up, as well as how the native population in the area would be treated. Taxation of local resources, including crops and livestock and labor, would increasingly be protected, to offset the peacekeeper’s expenses for services rendered. This would result in a feudal system of subservience to the foreign occupiers.

As happened in the former Yugoslavia and so many other places where the United Nations have intervened, the rising ethnostates in a balkanized America may find themselves in direct conflict with blue helmets, even to the extent of being bombed and attacked militarily. They will be our enemies.

Some may believe that the potential involvement of U.N. peacekeeping forces in the United States is far-fetched. It may smack of black-helicopter conspiracy theory. However, even now, some local officials in areas of America where law and order have broken down are inviting them in, such as Cook County Commissioner Richard Boykin, of Chicago.

He made this recommendation while meeting with the United Nations official in charge of peacekeeping missions.

Now, imagine if the federal government was severely weakened, and couldn't, or wouldn't, say "no"?

Prepare to shoot at blue helmets when America goes down.

Liberal Democrat Doug Jones won 95% of the black Vote in Alabama last night, and only 27% of the White vote. Due to the changing population of the five deep south states which have been designated as "New Africa" by Black Nationalists, that was enough for Jones to win.

What that means is that the demographic projections for the "black belt" written about in "The Balk" are already coming true. Higher black birth rates, re-migration of blacks back to the deep south, and regional migration of Whites out of the deep south to the upper south in response have made electoral politics as untenable in Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, and South Carolina, as they became in South Africa.

EthnoState

Even when three-quarters of Whites are united at the ballot box, a very rare margin in any election, that's not enough to outvote the nonWhites there, any more. Obsolete farm machinery whom the Founding Fathers never intended to be citizens or to have the vote, now rule the roost.

Judge Roy Moore soundly carried the remaining White rural areas of Alabama, as expected. A post-election results map will show what areas of the state are still White. More and more, they will largely be limited to the northern third of the state and a few coastal enclaves.

Despite the Jewish controlled media and coastal liberal onslaught against Roy Moore, with allegations of sexual impropriety in the past and a nationally orchestrated slander campaign against the conservative Republican, the race still came down to, well, race. Though White women and their vote were obviously the target of the allegations, 63% of them turned out to vote for Moore. By contrast, 98% of black women voted against him.

Rather than trying to ride the tiger and maintain long-term untenable control over the growing black and other nonWhite populations in states like Alabama, Whites remaining there are coming to realize that they will have to separate themselves out into an emerging White ethnostate, then reemerge and reconquer the lost territory at some later date, following the Balkanization of America.

It CAN be done. The cities of Birmingham and Montgomery can be reduced by siege and starved out, and the parallel "black belt" which divides the state be depopulated, but only after a protracted campaign waged with the strength of an ethnostate behind it. Secession and statewide politics are a non-starter.

Adjacent to the White area of northern Alabama where Dr. Michael Hill, President of the League of the South, lives, is the seedbed ethnostate of Franklin in East Tennessee. Don Black, the founder of the StormFront White Nationalist internet forums, is a native

Alabaman, but he is making plans to bypass his home state completely and move to Eastern Tennessee, as well.

Voting at the polls is over. It's time that Whites vote with their feet.

Some Jews in South America, generally out of the spotlight of the world's attention, appear to be working on an ethnostate of their own. Deep in Argentina, a Dutch patriot named Alex van Heugten who lives and works in the region has discovered plans for the formation of a Jewish autonomous region. They may be hedging their bets in case 'Greater Israel' is defeated once America balkanizes and is no longer able to fight their wars for them and finance their future expansion.

With the Pacific Ocean potentially becoming a Chinese lake, and the balkanization of America foreseeable, will New America's future be landlocked, or lebensraum?

In another example of America's failure at foreign policy and China's ascendancy, after publicly calling Obama a "son of a whore" and signing a new trade deal with China, the Philippines President asked U.S. forces to leave his nation. China has recently started building naval bases on reefs, the Scarborough Shoal, which had formerly been Philippine territory. With them in place, they will more firmly control the South China Sea, and beyond.

China has just made a deal with the East African country of Djibouti to build a deep water naval port there, and a base which will be home to 10,000 Chinese troops. The purpose of the new port there will be to secure the transport of oil tankers full of the petroleum which China continues to buy up from throughout the Middle East. New Chinese bases in Sri Lanka are also under construction. China is currently building its second aircraft carrier, the first one they're constructing entirely at home, to patrol the South China Sea from Vietnam to Indonesia, another major oil producer.

EthnoState

The current and ongoing crisis on the Korean peninsula shows that despite our bluster, the United States is powerless to effect regime change on Lil' Kim. Or, as an even greater sign of the coming fall, the U.S. lacks the will to exercise its power. More of that will be coming, including domestically.

After the Chinese take over the Philippines, the U.S. sphere of influence in the Pacific will be pushed back to the Hawaiian Islands, where Obama removed U.S. commercial fishing from an area five times the size of Alaska which he declared a protected ecological area, without prior Congressional approval. Of course Asian commercial fishing ships still haul in full cargo loads there, undercutting U.S. fishermen. Australia and New Zealand will have to either hunker down together and stay south of the Coral Sea, or sign "free trade" agreements with the region's new powerhouse, too. When America balkanizes, the Chinese can use the base at Pearl Harbor to shut down the West Coast of North America. The only shipping going in and out will be shipping which they approve of, inspect, cherry-pick, and tax. The Pacific Ocean will become a virtual Chinese lake. Millions of their citizens from Vancouver to San Francisco, as well as Chinese investment in Central America and Mexico, where they already have a foothold, will close the trap.

A financial depression or stock market crash, or a currency devaluation of either the dollar or the yuan, might be the trigger which brings about the balkanization crisis internationally, as well as nationally. Actually, a devaluation of the dollar might be worse for the Chinese, and therefore more balkanizing for us, than a devaluation of their own currency. That's because it would demolish America's ability to buy their stuff. The loss of the U.S. consumer market to dump their cheap goods on would cripple the Chinese economy in much the same way that the U.S. led trade embargo on Japan threatened to cripple the Japanese economy in 1941 and 1942. On July 26th, 1941, Franklin Delano Roosevelt seized all Japanese assets in the U.S., in response to Japanese forces moving through French Indo-China to attack Chinese troops. France, or more specifically the Vichy French government allied with Germany, agreed to the Japanese occupation of Cam Ranh Naval Base, 800 miles from the Philippines, again, where U.S. forces were attempting to contain Japanese expansion into the Pacific. The more things change, right? Britain and the Dutch East Indies followed the American lead. The Japanese were cut off from nearly 90% of their imported oil, and three-fourths of their total overseas trade, overnight. They only had enough strategic oil reserves to last for three years, half that long if they were on a wartime footing. By contrast, the U.S. maintains about a two month strategic oil reserve, at any given time, if we lost all production and import capacity and continued current consumption rates, today. Do the math.

In effect, just as Germany failed to do with Great Britain because of U.S. Naval convoys and the lend-lease program, even though they were an island nation, Japan felt as if it was a landlocked country. We all remember the drastic action which the Japanese were forced into, then, by 1942. They were suckered into attacking us, because Roosevelt badly wanted to get the U.S. into the fight to save Jews and Communism, and most Americans didn't. Therefore, after taking Saigon, again with France's permission, and expanding Eastwards, the Japanese set their sights on Pearl Harbor. They had to, to break the embargo and stay afloat. Roosevelt knew it. Don't think the elites are above doing something similar, again.

Currently, China holds about 1.3 trillion dollars in U.S. Treasuries. This amounts to around 25% of the total U.S. debt load held overseas, and about 8% of the total U.S. debt. Now, imagine if they knew they weren't ever going to be repaid, because the U.S. government abdicated both its power and its debts. If the West Coast of the U.S. is lost to the Chinese taking real estate as collateral for the loans which they aren't likely to be able to collect on otherwise from the U.S., and to the Mexicans with their Reconquista, and the East Coast doesn't become a part of New America, then the new nation will be landlocked, just like Switzerland, but with natural resources instead of banks. Austria and the Mongolian Empire are other examples of highly successful landlocked nations, but here are two other options: When America balkanizes we can hold northern Texas and the deepwater ports there, dividing New Africa and Aztlan; or, we can ethnically cleanse the Midwestern cities of Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, and Chicago, thereby having access to the Great Lakes as I portray in my “Hasten The Day” trilogy, and have shipping through the locks and channels from the Midwest into the Atlantic. Either way, we’d have direct connection to our potential allies and trading partners in Europe, rather than facing the Chinese lake which will be the Pacific Ocean when America goes down. That, of course, would be more natural, and preferable, in the long run, for the interests of New Americans.

Remember, too, that the colonial militias only won their independence from their government which they were in revolt against, the world’s biggest superpower, because they had outside help. Third party intervention can either aid, or hurt, either speed up, or slow down, a society’s balkanization. Ancient Rome had the Visigoths, and we have the Mexicans. But the colonials had the French, so perhaps we will have the Russians. Some things, though, we’ll have to sort out on our own.

Let’s imagine the southern-most reaches of what will be New America. The Texas deep water ports of Galveston, Texas City, Houston, Port Arthur, Orange, and Beaumont, basically everything north of Port Freeport, would be within the White controlled territory, in between New Africa and Aztlan.

Aztlan will undoubtedly keep Port Lavaca, Corpus Christi, Port Aransas, and Port O’Conner on Texas’s Southeast coast. Lone Star Republic dreamers in that neck of the woods won’t have time to sing a full chorus of “The Eyes of Texas”, maybe just the lash. New Africa will have Mobile and New Orleans, even if the Florida peninsula enclave of Whites do hold out and keep Pensacola and Panama City. The New African fleet may just consist of three old inner tubes and a pontoon boat, but they’ll have nice enough facilities to start out with. So, there won't be any monopoly on ports, or reason to immolate oneself fighting for another nation's, for either of the three neighbors then sharing the Gulf Coast.

As far as the Great Lakes option, it won't just be the Southwest balkanizing, once the house of cards starts to fall. Quebec could finally get their independence from Canada, and the mostly White upper New York state would be a whole different world from the downstate city. In other words, the St. Lawrence Seaway route to the Atlantic would be through White controlled areas. In fact, ironically, The United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea now gives a landlocked country a right of access to and from the sea without taxation of traffic through transit states. The U.N. has a program of action to assist landlocked developing countries, not that I'd hang our futures on the potentiality of fair treatment by the U.N., but it is interesting to consider. Again, in my "Hasten The Day" trilogy, access to the Atlantic through the Great Lakes for New America is described in detail, coming about through a combination of trade relations, treaty, and conquest.

In my recent discussions with the Founding Fathers of the emerging proto-ethnostate up there in upper New England, this did come up. Their feeling is that cultural differences between the different regions of the United States are significant enough that rather than rejoining in a solid and permanent union, autonomous regional White ethnostates such as ours in Ozarkia and theirs there could cooperate and trade without combining politically. Either way, that wouldn't affect their role as a gatekeeper for the St. Lawrence seaway, or, presumably, our access to the Atlantic.

In fact, it's questionable whether the remaining multiracial rump state of the U.S., the strip from Boston to Richmond maybe a hundred miles wide, could feed itself for very long. Just as with the large minority populations in urban areas currently dotting the Midwest, the surrounding productive White rural populations might well blockade and lay siege to this area until they can bargain with them from a position of strength. In the Midwestern cities, in a larger scale version of what happened over and over again during the Yugoslavian civil war, 10,000 blacks from Chicago might be traded with New Africa for an equal number of White refugees from southern Mississippi. This process could be repeated multiple times, reducing the amount of unfortunate bloodshed on both sides of those who failed to relocate to the correct side of the front lines in time, before the balkanization began in earnest. We have to be willing, and open minded enough, to make treaties and keep them, with integrity, for the best interests of all involved. That's the surest way for all of the peoples of North America to gain control of their own destinies, and ultimately, true self-government.

The area of Eastern, if you will, coastal Texas north of the Hispanic area where the deepwater ports are, wouldn't have a major issue with blacks, either. Galveston is under 20% black, while Port Arthur has one of the highest percentages at 43%, for example, but as with elsewhere, demographic groups will be reconsolidating behind friendly lines once the ethnic cleaning begins, which will probably stop at the Louisiana border for New Africa. Northern Texas's White population will be bolstered by European-American war refugees displaced from the central, Western, and Southern half of the state who nearly waited too long to jump from the continually heating pot of water. Without the jobs which initially drew them and through which they feed their families, the furthest-flung Mexican enclaves will collapse and retreat southwards. With that in mind, it will be crucial to allow them free evacuation transit in a singular direction, unmolested. Ideally, then, New America would therefore have two sea coasts, and two outlets to the world's oceans. Fifty miles of heavily defended East Texas coastline could make all of the difference, especially since each of the borders would be shared by different, potentially hostile (to each other, as well) nations.

Similarly, the area of Vermont and New York where the Eerie Canal and St. Lawrence Seaway flows through once it's past Cleveland and Buffalo is much Whiter than the area further south, towards New York City, which has the larger Jewish and other nonWhite population, predominantly. Please keep in mind that a Francophone, independent Quebec recently untied from the rest of Canada, and facing Europe, would be more drawn to France and Europe for trade than it would a rump remnant of the former U.S. which would cling to the BosNyWash corridor and the Mid-Atlantic East coast. Likewise, the prairie provinces of Canada, once the idea of our northern neighbor's bicoastal union is destroyed by Chinese occupation of their West and secession of the East, would be drawn to the U.S. Midwestern states, with which they have much in common. Perhaps, even, to the extent of eventual political confederation. As before, the South-Central and Midwestern states, our New America, will be the breadbasket of the continent, producing most of the food crops. Europe would be eager for that grain, and the natural gas, and other resources we'd have to trade with them. In exchange, until our own industry is rebuilt, we could import finished products, technological and mechanical equipment, durable goods, vehicles, and armaments from our kindred allies across the Atlantic.

Of course it won't be easy, or immediate. But I think establishing a link to the sea to the North or South or both is more likely than trying to get an extremely liberal, left wing White population in the Northwest to become an ethnostate homeland, with or without a Chinese expeditionary force of peacekeeping troops staking their claim to the West Coast in order to protect the interests of their people there in the absence of a national U.S. government which can guarantee their security, as well as secure some collateral for the loans they've made to the U.S.. They'd have just gobbled up the Philippines and Hawaii, and be on a roll. Even now, the average citizen of the Ozarks, the Appalachians, and the Midwest is quick to openly discuss civil war and the breakup of the U.S., while Northwesterners are busy passing more gun control laws, smoking pot, and protesting racism. The left coast is toast.

In short, if you're thinking of America's future breakup, don't pack away your swimming trunks just yet. Our submarines may have a place to park, after all.

Here are my responses to questions e-mailed to me by an individual who self identifies as a “wog”.

My answers are in bold following the questions:

1. Like others in this movement, I was nudged by Alex Jones via a South African expatriate. However, I was awakened in 2009 to the Jewish problem through an acquaintance. After reading “Jewish Supremacy” by David Duke, I have been on a quest to enlighten myself. I have been listening to Stormfront and Duke’s programme since they debuted on the Rense Radio network. I listen to other alt-right podcasts. It seems to be they all blame Jewish influence for the problems and ills bedeviling the White world. There is no gainsaying the Jewish role, but it takes two to tango. Aeons ago, the US was supposed to be 100% white. It doesn’t make any sense whites didn’t fight hard enough to prevent the importation of blacks through slavery and Jewish immigration. If whites of that era were racially aware and not cucked, why did they allow the aforementioned to occur?

I’m a Christian Identist, but I believe that God uses processes He sets into motion through His creation and design. That includes evolution. Because of the community cooperation required to survive and adapt to a harsh northern European environment, over hard millenia of winnowing and selection Whites developed a stronger sense of altruism, and generosity, than other races. Jews, with their own adaptive psychological survival trait of parasitism and purposefully undermining the homogeneity of their hosts as a reaction to having been pogromed minorities 109 times, took advantage of that sympathy and misplaced it towards our racial competitors quite effectively. They do that so they’re less likely to be recognized and singled out as the only minority in an otherwise homogeneous nation. So, they push for open borders and the destruction of traditional values, as well, for the same purpose.

2. Initially, I thought Anglin's liaisons with oriental women were canards. Recently, you skewered and called him out on your podcast for such. Nonetheless, I still visit his website (The DailyStormer) regularly. How can one purport to be bona fide and racially loyal when he/she fancies love and/or lust from racial outsiders? Doesn't that oppugn validity of this alt-right movement?

The racial treason of an individual does not negate the ideology which they attempt to profit from and latch onto. Otherwise, every case of political corruption or hypocrisy could be used as an excuse to dismantle representative democracy. The Alt Right and White Nationalism is in the process of purging itself of those who didn't have the healthy instincts to not race mix without being told not to, and that's a good process to be undergoing. Those who continue to read articles by race traitors should treat them no differently than they do articles by Jews who pretend to be White and steer our people. They may be funny or even, like a broken watch, right twice a day, but consider the source, always. Their motivations will always be suspect, and they should not be allowed in a White ethnostate in any position of influence because of the, at minimum, lack of judgement they have demonstrated on the most basic point of our existence.

3. a. From time to time, I hear deceased senator Robert Byrd was a sellout. What did he do to sellout? Furthermore, why do you call others in the movement 'sellout'?

b. Throughout the years, I have heard of "reformed white supremacists". Their story line tends to be the following: they were alcoholics, denigrated and attacked wogs/non-whites, and renounced their racism after being in the hoosegow. Do you think such folks were misguided and didn't understand true white nationalism or what?

Yes, Byrd and race traitors who get bought out, burned out, or turn to join the other team, as opposed to those who become disillusioned and quietly fade away into the general population, often were never truly committed to the idea or the purpose of White Nationalism, they simply were emotional wrecks and societal misfits with a personal axe to grind. Happy and well-adjusted individuals who are successful in the status quo rarely make good revolutionaries. Disaffected and disgruntled people usually aren't the stereotypical success story. They were LARPing or hobbyists, who get bored or scared, alternatively, when they discover that this is serious, and sometimes unglamorous, unlike a movie. The left has just as many, or more. They just don't mind keeping them around. Since they are the establishment, they just make of them a new fringe off of the old fringe. Sometimes they rise to the top. However, many millions of people who have served their tour of duty in the movement then reentered mainstream society still share our values and beliefs, they simply are living a less politically active life, having and raising kids, passing on their values, and they are still out there, on our side, just no longer on the front lines for the moment. They'll be there for us and with us, when the time comes. People will be surprised, on both sides, by how many of them there are.

4. Around 10 years old, I became repulsed by my own race. Initially, I was loathe to speak ill of my race. However, I soon came to grips with my justifiable "self-hatred". Of course, no race is perfect; but I don't cotton on to how anyone of my race can feel pride. I shouldn't feel racial pride when my race is notorious for its low I.Q, inability to build and maintain a civilization sans the white man's aegis, etc. Thus, growing up, I looked toward whites as proper role models. For all those in the alt-right movement who feel as though they are fishes out of water, they ain't got nothing on me...lol! If the West were to purge itself out wogs, I would not look forward to returning to my ancestral provenance. If I were to be in a leadership role, I would have to winnow down my race (some might call it genocide). Would you call me a twisted and disturbed individual or what? If you were in my shoes, what would you do?

I don't think you should hate your race. Rather, you, as a nonWhite, should stop looking at racial differences from a White perspective. IQ is a White domain. The different races adapted differently to different climactic and other environmental situations, like different competing designs all aimed at producing what Darwin called the "most favored" race in the group natural selection process. You should support and cheer for your team's design by celebrating the attributes which it holds. It's not so much about superiority as differences; the races must compete, and nature will decide at the end of the competition which is superior. That's why multiracialism is bad, if for no other reason than that it blunts the human evolutionary process by destroying the true diversity which nature requires to continue the collective advancement of the species through group natural selection competition. Through hybridization, the most recent and advanced recessive genes are buried by the more dominant "baseline" primitive genetic traits. Revel in what your race does well, and the traits it excels in, and promote them and it. That's the best way that you can serve both your race and humanity and as a whole. You do you, and let us do us.

5. Lately, the Philippines president (Duterte) has been employing a swinging and Procrustean approach to combating drug dealing and corruption. I commend Duterte on his efforts of ameliorating his country. Even if he were to rid the Philippines of drugs and corruption, the Philippines would still be inhabited by a low-I.Q'd populace. Last time I checked, low-I.Q'd people don't build developed societies. Do you think Duterte's efforts will be in vain or what? In order to raise a country's I.Q to a desirable level or at least enough to maintain a developed society, would half a century of aggressive education and punishment be the solution or would genocide (anthropogenic or act of nature/God) do the trick?

Eugenics, both positive and negative, can increase the IQ of any population. But striving for a higher IQ is trying to run in the lane of Whites, rather than attempting to foster what Asians do best: mass production and reproduction through stable, disciplined, hivelike societies. That's what it looks like he's working on regaining, more than a higher IQ population, and if that's the case he'll be more successful than if he attempted to compete directly with Whites in what, to continue the sports analogy, is really our event. IQ is the developed tactic of Whites to excel, especially the outlying IQs which create invention and abstract reasoning to innovation. Attempting to play catchup in that trait would be like us focusing on learning to defeat Kenyans in marathon running. They're better suited for it; let them have it. Each race needs to lean into what they are best adapted to excel at, and let nature and nature's God decide which tactic is successful, instead of trying to copy one another.

A lot of people feel frustrated about the growing degeneracy of the world. They understand that the electoral system is rigged, and that we won't be able to vote our way out of this mess until we have control over who the electorate is, once again. They comprehend that we cannot openly rebel against the Federal government at this stage, until it is weakened through an abdication of power or through its lessening will to exercise that power, and the erosion of support for it from both the right and the left. That phenomenon will accelerate as America polarizes and division grows further. Things fall apart, and the center cannot hold. As The ShieldWall Plan describes, our task during that process is to exacerbate the natural and organic voluntary separation of the races as we migrate towards emerging ethnostates.

On an individual level, we all have a duty, a responsibility, and a limited window of opportunity to influence those around us. That is especially true for those who are in our circle of friends and family who will listen, or who are compelled to hear, if not listen. It's all too easy to say that some people are not made of the stuff to be leaders, or to think individually. Our inclinations to believing in genetic dominance of character traits, and our recognition of patterns of behavior, lead us to give up on many who seem to be taking an undisciplined, conformist track. That is a disservice to them, however. It also is a disservice to ourselves and our people.

Do we really believe that all of the millions of young German youth shown in lines of ranks, standing smartly in their uniforms at the Nuremburg rally, understood National Socialism, or even believed in it, ideologically? Of course not. They did what they were told to do, and that not only benefited them, it served the greater good of their people. To adopt the attitude of not caring about the performance or achievement of our youth in searching for jobs, or mates, or their education, reinforces to them that they also should not care about doing their best at whatever they do, whether it is something they chose to do themselves, or not. Otherwise, how can they learn to follow the directions of a boss once they are employed? How can they learn to be disciplined in their everyday life, or at work, or one day, when they are given a command by a superior officer, once the war begins?

Some may say that we cannot compete with the federal government, or public schools, or the controlled media and popular culture, or peer pressure. They say we cannot influence or direct the next generation. They have bowed their heads in defeat. Imagine if Hitler had given up on the youth of Germany, in 1930? The Weimar republic was just as corrupt and degenerate as modern America is. Yet, the NSDAP prevailed, through discipline. Discipline among their ranks, discipline among their followers, and discipline among the people.

Young people are formed by discipline to either be slaves to their characters, flawed or not, or to suppress their imperfect leanings for self improvement. The same is true of children of all ages. Even millennials, even Gen X, and even Boomers. They act like recalcitrant, unruly kids. They rebel against authority. Our job is not to give up on them and assume that they are all sheep and lost to us. Our job is to make the best of them by disciplining them to better themselves. A united front focused on improving our people, not refusing to care about them, will make them the best that they can possibly be. That requires both internal and external discipline, for ourselves, and for them.

For those who self-identify as National Socialists, of course, rather than as libertarians, discipline is even more crucial, from both inside oneself, and from one's people.

Discipline is remembering what it is that you really want. Do you really want to have a party every weekend and get drunk? Do you want to engage in flame wars? Do you want to have a pity party? Or do you really want to help push what cannot fly, and is already falling?

Don't give up on yourself, or our people. Remember that they are OURS. You can change the world, one person at a time. Let that person be you. Start at home. Start with yourself. We will win.

Some interested people, potential activists and supporters, have asked me what the ultimate plan and goal of the ShieldWall Network is. They want to see all of my cards laid out on the table, face up, before they will truly commit themselves and their primary personal loyalty to the ShieldWall.

I understand their hesitancy to join the growing ShieldWall, and make it their top loyalty by jumping on board, without knowing where the driver is headed. At the same time, there's always a risk in telegraphing your punches. It ruins the surprise.

Okay. I give. Here's the super secret, diabolical, confidential plan: I don't mind telling you, because it's going to happen, anyway, whether you're a part of it or not, and whether everybody hears about it, or not.

EthnoState

Really, you don't have to plan nature, God has already done a pretty good job of doing that for us. Any plan made by man should take advantage of the natural processes already put into motion by God, in order to be assured of success...at least, we'd be wise to not purposefully run counter to His revealed will and intent, if we want to succeed. The ShieldWall Plan is organic and natural. There are very real, observable, documented natural processes at work in America today. They simply follow human nature, and don't require cajoling or browbeating or convincing people to follow them. I'm not trying to sell this plan, it already sells itself, because it's what our people WANT to do, and what they ALREADY are doing, right now.

Those ongoing natural processes already at work in America lend themselves to division, polarization, and ultimately, balkanization. It is now inevitable that even an authoritarian establishment cannot maintain the multiracial empire in perpetuity. A breakup is coming. As the demographic changes which are a part of that natural and ongoing process continue to accelerate, migrations of people to separate and settle out isn't something that has to be preached about, cheerled, begged, or forced. It's already happening, through voluntary, regional White flight.

There is, as many of you know, the Northwest Plan, aiming to entice White Nationalists into moving to the Pacific Northwest. That idea presupposes that building a White mini-state in the most liberal part of the country made up of the most left-wing people and with a rising Asian population facing Asia across what will be, when America balkanizes, a Chinese lake, is a recipe for success. There is, however, an alternative, an alternative which simply takes advantage of voluntary migrations already happening as people vote with their feet.

Blacks are moving back to the deep south from Midwestern and northeastern cities, and combined with the higher comparative birth rate of blacks increasing their numbers there,

EthnoState

Whites are responding by moving from the darkening deep south to the White upper south. Herein lies the essence of the ShieldWall Plan.

The ShieldWall Plan: continue to evacuate Whites from darkening Louisiana, Mississippi, and south Arkansas to the Ozarks. Gain influence and power in the over forty contiguous counties there, straddling the Arkansas and Missouri border, that are already over 95% White and very conservative by becoming active, involved persons of influence in those communities. Gain access to city and county governments, institutions, and organizations. Build the ethnostate. Around the fringe of that forty county area which is over 95% White is an area equally as large which is around 90% White. In sharp contrast to other areas of the country, Whites moving to the Ozarks from the darkening deep south (as well as some from other regions of the country such as the upper Midwest) are causing the White percentage in Ozarkia to INCREASE.

The seeds of this plan were planted in my fictional ‘Hasten The Day’ trilogy a few years ago. The demographic trends and population change models were quantified and the data supporting the ongoing process were updated, explained, and published in the nonfiction ‘The Balk’ a year later. Things have only accelerated since then.

Our new ethnostate will not be small. It will not be isolated. It will not be landlocked, contrary to popular belief. It will be a superpower. After a relatively short period of establishment and coalescence while our multiracial and nonWhite neighbors regress and collapse, New America will expand again, like a nuclear explosion pushing outwards once the atoms are bound together and compressed, their energy collected, and then released. Boom, baby. We will take it back.

The Heartland, the red states, what coastal liberals call ‘flyover country’, will be New America, when the balkanization happens. After the United States breaks up, the large nonWhite enclaves such as St. Louis, Kansas City, Chicago, and Memphis will be reduced through negotiation, evacuation, siege, conflict, and cleansing. Smaller islands of color in the Midwest's sea of White will be drowned, as well, following the pattern most recently demonstrated in the former Yugoslavia in the 1990s. New America will coalesce and congeal from the Appalachians to the Rockies, from the Great Lakes to the Texas Coast. But it begins here. It starts with us, in the ShieldWall.

We need people who are able to, to move to the Ozarks and join us. We need those of you here, and outside the core, to network with one another and with us. We need you, throughout the Midwest and the West and the Upper South, to begin forming your own local ShieldWall Network franchises of activists and preppers in your area. We have the experience and expertise to help teach you how to organize, find and cherry pick and radicalize like-minded Whites all around you. Next, we will guide you in becoming a leader of your peers, and help you establish outposts which will grow into vehicles of local and regional control and government when the illegitimate federal government abdicates and is removed from power by the coming balkanization.

That's the plan. I call it 'Project New America'. We even have a theme song on The Roper Report podcast. In my mind, it is clear and concise, natural and organic, and most important of all, it is already happening. Don't mess with mother nature. Ride the tiger. This is happening. We're headed to our future. Climb on board with the ShieldWall.

The instability of the current American political system, reflected in the increased polarization and division of the population into diametrically opposed camps, has increased global tensions from North Korea to Venezuela. Wherever the potential next external war originates, it now is likely to go nuclear. There's a high probability that such an escalation would decapitate the government of the United States, creating a vacuum of power and resulting abdication of sovereignty over much of the nation. This would certainly result in a civil war between relatively racially homogeneous regions, causing the balkanization of the country and the rise of ethnostates. Yes, including White ethnostates, fam.

Think about where the nearest U.S. military bases, ports, air fields and training centers and depots are to you, as well as cities of over 100,000 in population. These are the primary and secondary targets you can expect to be hit in a wide-scale nuclear attack. If you're within five miles of any of the above, either move or dig down really, really deep, as in a couple of basement levels deep, and plan on staying there for a year. With modern nuclear weapons, especially intercontinental ballistic missiles, five miles one way or another off target is well within the margin of error, anyway.

On the 10/9/17 StormFront Radio show, Dr. Patrick Slattery and Father Francis and myself discussed the Balkanization theory, and the book at the end of this update. The book discusses the probable future breakup of the United States. Dr. Slattery asked whether, as happened in the dissolution of the Soviet Union, gaining control over the Federal government would be crucial to separating the nation into racially homogeneous ethnostates. Roper responded that perhaps a better analogy might be Mustafa Kemal Ataturk's partitioning of the former Ottoman Empire in order to strengthen Turkey, but that if Whites had the will and strength to regain control over the Federal government, they could deport and ethnically cleanse nonWhites from the entire country, rather than dividing it. Since they do not, and are unlikely to, the best avenue towards balkanization is actually a weakening or abdication of federal power. The hosts and Roper then discussed the emerging Hispanic majority in the southwest and black majority in the southeastern U.S., and the White flight from those regions in response, which is exacerbating the emergence of at least three ethnostates.

Despite the overall population of the United States becoming more "diverse", which means more nonWhite, something which we are told is a wonderful thing to celebrate, because being divided and different makes us stronger and the people who founded the United States of America specifically of, by, and for their own people becoming a minority in it is obviously what the nation was created to be all about, the country's schools are becoming more segregated, meaning that those increasingly diverse peoples are choosing to move to sort themselves out. They are voluntarily seceding with their feet and self-balkanizing into racially homogeneous regions.

As that blessed diversity increases in a city, the city segregates more and more into racial and ethnic neighborhoods. When the city as a whole is sufficiently diversified, i.e., made less White, the Whites move out of the city to the suburbs. When nonWhites pursue them into the suburbs, White flight bleeds out into rural areas to escape the brown tide. As that becomes no longer enough of an escape from squalor and crime, Whites leave the state and region, to go to New America. Here is how that breaks down:

Whites are moving out of the deep south as blacks move into it from the north and simultaneously outbreed them. They are moving to the upper south, to Tennessee and Arkansas. Whites are moving out of the southwest and California as Latino immigrants, legal and illegal, take over there, as well, and are moving to the West and Northwest. The effect of this internal migration, as I discussed in my book 'The Balk', is the separation of America out into at least three distinct ethnostates, with some areas still being contested, and others irredeemably mixed. Look around you, and you will see it happening. Have you decided which future you want to be a part of, yet, or are you waiting for someone to choose, for you?

Chapter Three

Over 4% of Americans are willing to publicly state that they agree with the beliefs of White Nationalism and the “White Supremacy movement”. Based on today’s current U.S. population, that’s 13 million people. That’s more than FOUR TIMES the population of my state.

More than that are “undecided” about us. A majority of our nation believes that race relations have gotten worse over the last year. Me, too.

I know that many of us, despite all the proof we’ve had that people don’t answer polls honestly due to social pressure and that the questions and the sample pool of voters asked are skewed, are still fascinated by them. Remember every major media poll up until the day of the election saying that Hillary was going to win by a landslide? Yeah. Still, we do love’em. That’s natural, because a lot of us are wondering when we will reach that tipping point, that percentage of support among the increasingly polarized, disenfranchised, alienated, and radicalized White population to ready us for the crisis trigger scenario for balkanization and the rise of White ethnostates. To what...vote our way of this mess? Noooooooooo. ;->

Patience, grasshopper. Yes, we can smell their blood, and their fear. They know it’s coming, too. That’s why they are so desperate to shut us up, either through governmental or corporate censorship, or even more directly, you, you, domestic terrorists, you. Steve Bannon wants to have internet service providers and social media platforms regulated by the government like utilities are, so service can’t be denied to people based on the whims of the owners. A point we can make, for what little it’s worth, about “private businesses” denying service to “racist” Whites in this ongoing purge is based on actual historical use of the law by the other side.

EthnoState

Remember how they shut down private businesses such as cafes in the 1960s which were segregated? They used the Interstate Commerce Clause. Any business which crosses state lines, such as on the internet, even if it's private, cannot withhold service from any person for any Constitutionally protected status, such as creed, or for first amendment protected speech, based on the ICC. It's NOT a private businesses' right to refuse service to us, that's a holdover in people's minds from their latent libertarianism. It's unConstitutional. Remember, "bake my cake or go to jail". Muh Constitution. Well, it will trigger the people in the middle, anyway.

Speaking of whom, the poll didn't clearly separate out those who would actually be fighting in a civil war, to ask them their opinion about Charlottesville and White Nationalism. 7% of men support us. 48% of Trump voters. Boomer cucks and women, even White ones, are almost uniformly going to publicly virtue-signal against White Nationalism. Females of both genders just care more about being in the majority and a part of the consensus, naturally. But what if young White males of military age had been asked?

It's true that if they're not ready to answer a poll question forthrightly, they're not yet ready to fight. But they're getting closer every time, as the Hegelian dialectic shifts rightwards, headed our way. That Overton Window is distorting from the Constitution towards Mein Kampf, line by line. Our responsibility is to continue to serve as the radical flank effect and be as extreme as possible in order to scoot over and make room for the new people coming in from our left to be comfortable next to us. Then we can snuggle.

Oh, and as far as the numbers game goes? In 1775, 3% of the colonial American population wanted Independence from Great Britain.

Life comes at you fast.

EthnoState

Remember, though, it starts with each and every one of us. The rest are sheep who will follow us, or get out of the way.

Imagine a scenario. Suspend disbelief for a minute. You're asleep. Your phone rings. It's a blocked call. You answer. A disembodied voice says your name, tells you what you are wearing, what you last ate, and that the next person who speaks to you will say "I think I broke my toe."

Before you can interrupt, they tell you that things have gotten to the tipping point. The crisis trigger scenario which will cause massive riots, ethnic conflict, and systemic collapse is inevitable, now. In ninety days' time, at noon, the power grid will go down and not return. The United States will begin Civil War II and balkanization. Millions of people will die of starvation, disease, and violence. Millions more will become refugees from ethnic cleansing. Whites will have a shot at an ethnostate, but there will be a chaotic period of struggle which could last years, in the meantime. "Ninety days", the voice repeats, then the line goes dead.

You stare at your phone, wondering who crank called you, and how they knew what you were wearing and what you ate. It rings again, in your hand. You expect it to be another blocked call, and are ready to either not answer, or start cursing them if you do, but it's your best friend, whom you've known your whole life. Breathing a sigh of relief, you answer, and say Hello.

"Hey, I think I broke my toe", they say.

What would you do? Would you continue as you have been doing? Would you maintain your same level of activism? Or would you try to reach out to people locally who could be persons of influence in your community when things fall apart? Would you try to get active in real life to find like-minded people who could stand with you against the coming storm, or would you binge on everything which might not be available in a few months? Would you buy up canned food and ammunition, or take out a loan and blow your savings on a trip around the world, to see it all before it's irrevocably changed, forever? Would you tell the people you care about, or let them fend for themselves? What would you do, if we only had ninety days before America went down?

How do you know that we don't?

Here's your wakeup call. I don't know what you're wearing, or what you ate last, or what the next person you speak with will say to you, nor do I know the exact date, but I know this:

It's coming.

On a Reddit group, Rough Map of a Balkanized US \(based on current political divisions\), some people are trying to imagine what the continent will look like when the United States balkanizes, based roughly on current political regions. Some of the comments are more insightful than the map itself. More of California will go to Mexico. The deep south will be New Afrika. Other changes will evolve, based more on demographics, than culture or politics.

For example, southern Whites who are so soft that they think they will VOTE their way to a new nation, or who if there is a war, are not ruthless enough to ethnically cleanse the contested area of both maggots as well as flies, will lose, as they deserve to. So will Whites in other regions who ally themselves with race mixers, homosexuals and other degenerates, and Jews. Contrarily, nonWhites who think being conservative and claiming Christianity will save them will be in for a sharp surprise when confronted with true White patriots who are based.

Some of the participants get it, though, as this recent comment makes clear:

“I don’t know how happy the residents of the New American Confederacy would be, seeing as the whole country is pretty much the black belt.”

By the very definition of ethnic conflict, either before or after a White ethnostate emerges, those who retarded its creation and growth by not being sufficiently ruthless to its genetic enemies will face, at best, exile to live among the nonWhites they were unwilling to eliminate. If there are any left on the other side of the new borders. if not, they can join them in fertilizing our tomatoes.

When we look at how and why formerly homogeneous nations balkanize, we see that it’s most often because they either never were, or cease to be, homogeneous nations at all. That’s why Yugoslavia, an artificial conglomeration, broke up into smaller ethnostates, and that’s why the modern countries of Kenya, Syria, and Iraq are heading in the same direction. Due to its continually increasing division and polarization, the United States is well on its way to breakup, as well. Red States vs. Blue. Flyover vs. the Coastlands. Regionally, as well as politically, culturally, and racially, America is more divided than it has been in over a generation, and more fragile in its union than it has been since the last civil war.

And, when we look at when such balkanization events occur, we find that typically some crisis scenario undermines and weakens the legitimacy and power of the central authority; usually an external war, such as happened with the Ottoman Empire, leading to internal dissolution, or economic stress, such as with the former Soviet Union, leading to the central authority becoming bankrupt and overextended.

The U.S. Federal budget deficit is $441 billion as of the most current budget estimate. That’s for Fiscal Year 2017 which covers October 1, 2016, through September 30, 2017. The deficit occurs because the U.S. government spending of $4.073 trillion is higher than its revenue of $3.632 trillion. All of us who have to balance household budgets know that this won't fly. At the end of FY 2017, the gross US federal government debt is estimated to be $19.5 trillion, according to the FY17 Federal Budget. Much of that debt is held by foreign banks and foreign governments, including China and Japan, each of which hold around 7%, depending on currency fluctuations.

There also, of course, is a looming credit bubble, which could burst, just as the housing bubble did nine years ago, except with far worse ramifications.

The Slow Collapse of Imperial Power looks at how the national institutions of the United States, particularly the federal governmental ones, have lost all legitimacy except as implementer of either the carrot (welfare and other “benefits”) or the stick (law enforcement, which for the first time expanded its power unilaterally by sentencing the first person to death for a federal ‘hate crimes’ conviction).

Once the federal government is no longer able to feed its subjects the carrot, or beat them with a stick, or when someone else has a bigger carrot or a bigger stick, even that limited loyalty is lost. Greed and fear have replaced patriotism as factors in why people stand and make the pledge of allegiance. The problem with being feared, rather than loved, is that there's always somebody scarier. The problem with being needed, rather than wanted, is that there's always somebody with deeper pockets. In the event of an economic crisis such as the one which many economists are forecasting, the United States government may have to forestall its entitlement program outlays, and abdicate much of its direct power over the several states. In such a scenario, the top down authoritarian enforcement of multiracialism will pop off the lid of the simmering melting pot, and the already highly divided and polarized public will, many of them, either be happy to have the excuse to look after their own interests, or be forced to, whether they like the idea, or not. Let's be frank. How long after their EBT cards stopped working, would blacks in inner cities remain pacified? How long after they stopped getting paid for their shipments, would rural White farming areas stop shipping food into those cities?

We read a lot, therefore, about crisis secession scenarios, either in terms of de facto or de jure secession as #CalExit supporters and Republic of Texas dreamers fantasize about, in different directions. Cascadia, Dixie, the Northwest Republic, and a dozen other movements wish for autonomy. I'm not immune from the frenzy, either. Wherever and whatever we want our utopian future to be, it's bound to be someone else's dystopia, almost certainly someone who has their eyes on the same piece of real estate, with an entirely different future in mind. That's why no independence movement, even in a vacuum of federal power, is ever likely to vote itself sovereign. As such, things will get messy, but the less outside influence there is being exercised, the less messy it could be, potentially. Does it make us unpatriotic, then, to think that the economic collapse of the federal government, and the removal of central government power, is in the best interests of our people? Not if we have a truly national, rather than civic, definition of just who 'our people' are, and not if we've already accepted the inevitability of two other things: multiracial democracy cannot fly, and what cannot fly, must fall. The only logical conclusion, then, is that forced integration and authoritarian multiracialism is not in our people's interests, so what is in their interests, is separation and balkanization, with each group inheriting their own slice of the pie, free from oppression, racism, and domination by any other group, finally.

So, have you figured out who your people are? Are they anyone to the right of Che Guevara, regardless of whether they have mixed race kids? People who have spent their lifetime using fake names and marrying into something? Anybody who calls themselves Alt Right, or supports free speech? Those who welcome Whites, as well as Jews and Asians? Are they anyone who has the spotlight or their daddy's millions in a trust fund to get it? Or, do you recognize that the Founding Fathers meant something exclusive when they said they were establishing this nation to secure the blessings of liberty for their progeny? They meant for the United States to be a nation of, by, and for White people, specifically. And, having failed so epically in that vision that it cannot be regained through the ballot box, that dream must be awoken from, to a new reality. A New America.

It will be a lovely place where people who have encouraged the inclusion of race mixers, Jews, and homosexuals are put up against a wall.

You don't have to do anything but watch, as its already taking shape. But you can choose to either stand astride the train tracks of history with your safety pins and your rainbow flag saying "Stop!", or you can get out of the way, or you can help spread the word, as many are doing. When the thin veneer of civilization artificially held on by full fridges and steady lights falls away, then we will all get real, quick. And when Big Brother is no longer able to feed us or spank us for not behaving, there's going to be a temper tantrum that will make all of the horror story myths about the 19th and 20th centuries sound downright comfy. If anti-White liberals continue to try to force multiracialism and White genocide on us, then by the time we're through, they'll be thinking of the plantation and the concentration camps as safe spaces, by comparison. Because, all you've done with your tales of victimization, is given us some really cool ideas, along with the realization that however bad it was, apparently it wasn't enough, so this time, we'll have to finish the job.

Or, we could just go our separate ways, without the mass graves. Flip a coin.

A brand new Chicago Tribune article describes the continuing migration of blacks from northern cities, in this case particularly Chicago, back to the south. It's a phenomenon going on throughout the country, directly in line with the demographic exodus I quantified and extrapolated about the coming breakup of America into smaller, more homogeneous ethnostates.

EthnoState

Along with the re-migration of blacks back to Dixie comes a parallel and cause and effect related flight of White southerners out of the deep south of the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, to the upper south, which is still predominantly White, and in fact is growing more so every day due to these new semi-refugee arrivals. This trend is anticipated to continue until the black belt dominates local politics in the region, and political and racial separation through geographic segregation becomes first the de facto, then the de jure, reality in the former Confederacy.

I point out that the future of the West is Balkanization, or retreat into separate enclaves per ethnic group, because the policy of diversity has failed and as a result, people have fallen back on what “freedom of association” remains to withdraw from the disaster of mixed-ethnic society and produce their own communities mirroring European countries.

And on this year’s edition, out this week, they say natural geographic sorting has taken place over the past couple of decades. Liberals have moved next to liberals, conservatives next to conservatives. It used to be the rule just not to bring up politics in polite company. Now imagine a real estate ad – two-bedroom, one-and-a-half-bath, cul-de-sac, good schools, nice neighbors, no people of the other party need apply.

*Of course, the recent media coverage about racial gerrymandering also supports the observation I made in my book The Balk, as does a 2017 NPR program: people are moving to segregate themselves politically and racially, to live among their own kind ethnically and culturally, voting with their feet, as America separates itself out through internal immigration on the road to balkanization. The black areas are becoming blacker, the Hispanic areas browner, and the White areas whiter. What we are witnessing is the emergence of new ethnostates, which will become new nations when America goes down.*

politically and racially, to live among their own kind ethnically and culturally, voting with their feet, as America separates itself out through internal immigration on the road to balkanization. The black areas are becoming blacker, the Hispanic areas browner, and the White areas whiter. What we are witnessing is the emergence of new ethnostates, which will become new nations when America goes down.

Spencer Quinn makes some very rational arguments through Counter-Currents Publishing that it's in the best interests of Jews in the United States to go ahead and accept the inevitable breakup of America into smaller ethnostates. They've already been recognized as the "other", the parasitic pushers of open borders, diversity, and White genocide, he implies, and if they don't accept a peaceful divorce of the different races which they tried unsuccessfully to melt into a tan global proletariat labor class to rule, then pogrom #110 is going to be a lot harder on them, once it happens. This time, in fact, we may just finish the job.

He's an excellent, intelligent writer, and his arguments would be convincing to any people who were rational. But, are the Jews too driven by chutzpah, and too instinctively falling back on their parasitic group adaptive survival strategy, to listen?

As predicted, the ongoing internal migrations within state borders also reflects the voluntary seceding with their feet in which Whites are moving out of the deep south to the upper south, and out of the southwest to the northwest. In both cases, they are engaging in regional White flight. Here in Arkansas, a new study cited in this article supports the idea that Whites are moving out of the majority black central Arkansas and Little Rock region, to the overwhelmingly White Northern Arkansas area.

These internal migrations demonstrate realignment of population groups in anticipation of the racial breakup of the United States.

EthnoState

As blacks move out of New York City and other large northeastern urban areas such as Philadelphia to move back to the deep south, accelerating the well-documented White flight out of that area in response, Whites are also moving out of racially mixed areas of the northeast, headed for the midwest and the upper south, where a new White homeland seems to be forming in the Heartland of America.

The high cost of living, horrendous weather, and scarce jobs are all listed as reasons why people are separating along racial lines in the northeast, but beneath the New York Post article's willful color-blind pablum lies the stark reality. People are voluntarily migrating away from one another. They are seceding with their feet, and going to their separate corners of the country. Most likely, they will come out swinging. I don't know about you, but I'm just waiting for the bell.

Chapter Four

When it comes to the breakup of America, not all states will go one way or another in whole chunks. Some will be divided. An article by a northern Arkansas news station steps painfully through convoluted reasons why the northern half of the state is different from the southern half: oh, our accents, right? No, we all know that northern Arkansas is overwhelmingly White, and southern Arkansas is majority black. In fact, that's why a lot of people who live in northern Arkansas have chosen to do so. Actually, about a third of the population in my 96% White county moved here on purpose from southern Arkansas, or Mississippi, or Louisiana, and not just for the scenery, either.

Meanwhile, anti-war mom Cindy Sheehan has joined the new effort to get a secession referendum for Caliexit on the ballot in California.

These stories, and more like them, have been published since I peacefully lay my head down last night to enjoy the sleep of the innocent. It's hard to keep up, as more and more people are recognizing what's coming and getting vocal about it. But, I'll continue to do it, for you, dear readers, and for those who haven't yet seen the balkanization looming. Help me shake them awake, will you? If you care about someone enough to want to see them survive the breakup of America, point them to my books. It's the best way you can show them how much they matter to you: you'd like to keep them around when the whole shithouse goes up in flames.

Back when I was a young teenager, shortly after I first met Ronald Reagan and the elder George Bush, I began reading The National Review magazine. During the Cold War, when the Russians were the bad guys (does anybody remember those days?), it was an intelligent, sometimes clever alternative to the Marx lite of the rest of the mainstream media. That was before I slipped rightwards through the John Birch Society to the Council of Conservative Citizens to the National Alliance over the next few years. These days, it's the voice of Civic Nationalism, which makes it a shill for law and order multiracialism. In this new article, the author (who is President of the Center for Equal Opportunity) whines about Americans being further divided and categorized as members of a particular race. The Civic Nationalists are in the unenviable position of standing astride the train tracks of history yelling "Stop!", but I don't have any pity on them. They heaped plenty of coal into the locomotive, themselves.

While it is true that access to non-Jewish controlled news and political commentary, as well as participation in reinforcing and radicalizing echo chambers online, have sped up political polarization and balkanization, there is actually much more going on than just the internet can be blamed for.

In another sign that it is moving closer to secession or at least conquest by anti-White, pro-Reconquista political forces, the California State Senate has passed a bill moving forward making the entire state a sanctuary for illegal immigrants.

Civic Nationalism not only cannot do more than temporarily prolong the inevitable collapse, it leads from 'law and order' conservatism to raceless, establishment- propping-up authoritarianism. By bayonet point, through force from above, is the only way that multiracialism can be maintained. Diversity destroys freedom. You cannot have the two at once. Personally, as a National Socialist, I think BOTH are overrated.

So, it won't be a question of fighting for multiracial democracy, a corruption of the vision of the White Nationalist Founding Fathers who established our White republic. It will be multiracial autocracy, the inverse of their ideal.

EthnoState

If the United States does not become more and more a totalitarian police state, it will balkanize and break up, pure and simple. Those in power understand that. Do you?

The fate of our big, empty northern neighbor is largely tied to our own. That's largely due to the fact that 90% of the Canadian population still live within a tank of gas of the U.S. border, and it's really, well, America lite. So, if we break up, they do, too, just as the Quebecois have wanted, in fits and starts, from the beginning. They're not the only ones. In the Arctic far north of the country, there's a strong movement for Native American autonomy or outright independence, parts of their West Coast has more Chinese than Canadian citizens, and the prairie provinces might as well be named North North Dakota.

Chapter Five

Republicans are accepting what Liberals are currently pushing for, and which White Nationalists have been advocating for years. The coming breakup of the United States is now a certainty. All that remains to be determined is the details of when and how hard.

Both right wing and left wing want a divorce. Let's call it 'irreconcilable differences'.

As a former candidate for Governor and President in 2010 and 2012, I don't necessarily share this author's confidence in the likelihood of affecting much real change through the electoral process, but I do endorse their belief in increased real world activism, including through the system, to increase backlashes, polarization, and balkanization by promoting identity politics.

I use the radical flank effect, I'm purposefully publicly IRL as extreme as I can be legally in my media interviews, protests, rallies, et. al., so that I can create elbow room to my left for others to say nearly the same thing in a much more palatable, by comparison, manner. Compared to me, they sound reasonable, and are much more likely to fall rightwards into the vacuum I create by dragging the Hegelian dialectic behind me and throwing bricks through the Overton Window. And you know what? It's working, fam...

When will the right? Radical flank effect. The radical flank effect refers to extreme radicals' effect on moderates within a political struggle.

‘The Balk’, p. 101: “Let’s talk now about what I call the ‘radical flank effect’, as it relates to the Balkanization process. It’s part and parcel of the dialectic struggle, as first expressed by Hegel and later by Marx as what he called ‘dialectic materialism’. Basically, whenever there are two diametrically opposed ideologies clashing, they ...”

‘The Big Picture’, P. 43: “...establishment’s system, after this election cycle, more and more of them will be ready to consolidate the opportunity coming when other groups flex ... Our responsibility, then, is to spread the memes, amplify the message, and serve as radical flank effect activists to clear the way for more of our people to survive.

Whether you are a member of a patriotic organization, or independent, we invite you to take part in this locally-focused, grassroots endeavor. ... We all have the ability, opportunity, and responsibility to serve as leaders and spokespersons in our communities, using the radical flank effect to shift the Overton ...

I’m this extreme because somebody has to be. You won’t. Or can’t. So I am. There’s nothing to the right of me except the wall. Follow me rightwards. Millions of our people are right behind us, headed this way.

The ongoing turmoil in Zimbabwe, formerly White ruled Rhodesia, provides another stark lesson to those who would return to a multiracial society with Whites controlling a nonWhite population, rather than being separate from them.

This very interesting article is two years old, but demographic data from 2015 and 2016 support the thesis expressed, namely, that some southern states are on the way to becoming majority nonWhite within the near future. In fact, as regional White flight out of the black belt accelerates, so will this process.

Texas, of course, is already majority nonWhite, though north Texas may well be preserved as a part of New America, where their Gulf deepwater ports would be very useful. Georgia and Florida will both go majority nonWhite within less than a decade. Louisiana and Mississippi are projected to follow suit the decade after, with Virginia and North Carolina not far behind. As the recent elections in the Old Dominion demonstrate, the cultural and political shift in each state will happen before the actual demographic tipping point, due to White racial renegades and traitors.

As Mr. Don Black of StormFront recently expressed, balkanization is now inevitable, and many White Southerners are doing as he is soon planning on doing: moving to the upper south. While Mr. Black is leaving Florida and joining the patriots in East Tennessee, many Nationalists such as League of the South President Dr. Michael Hill reside in the adjoining areas of northern Alabama, or in northern Georgia, north of the black belt. Mr. Black also specifically recommends the Ozarks, where the ShieldWall plan focuses.

2 Corinthians 6:17: Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.

This January, CBS News published a relatively lengthy article discussing the coming balkanization and breakup of America. The astounding feature read, in large part, like something I might have written in discussing some of my books on the subject of the U.S.'s impending fracture.

In the very mainstream media commentary, called 'Is America Still Worth It?', CBS News managing editor for politics Will Rahn writes that rather than one country of 300 million people, we might be better off with three countries of one hundred million. The remainder of his article opined, correctly in this author's view, that America is becoming more and more polarized and divided every day, and that many people-on both the right and the left-see separation into smaller, more homogeneous nations as the best solution. Those who have read my past writings promoting the idea of balkanization for that very reason and thought that they were extreme and fringe would do well to read his piece, written from just left of center.

These two articles, together, represent two rather different views of the potential breakup of the United States. The first, from the moderate left, is not as hopeful as the second, from the moderate right, that real conflict, as opposed to political division, will not result from the ongoing internal migrations as people self-segregate, along with the increasing hostility with which both sides see one another. It's not atypical for the conservatives, drawn by their instinct to preserve the status quo and stand up for law and order, to hope for stability. This time, however, I side with the left.

This is an interesting hypothesis. Not exactly class war, since many poor Whites would be on the other team, but a civil war between disenfranchised and alienated, racially conscious Whites, and the establishment, might accompany balkanization, and even immediately precede and overlap with a race war because the first conflict, between non-racial and racial Whites, would free those of us who do have the will to fight for our people from those who do not, and hold us back as they desperately seek to shore up the middle from erosion on both the left and the right.

How many of you can follow this train of thought to its logical conclusion...that not everybody who is White should be welcomed by us simply for the sake of numbers?

That's what the Alt Lite optics cucks are saying, but they mean it in an entirely different way, or at least they would exclude from a different standard, than I would. If it's going to be a culture war first, then homosexuals and libertarians and the weakest in their big tent are the biggest liabilities, and should be the first purged. Culture wars are not won by moderates.

There are some big-tent advocates in the alt lite who advocate trying to change the American culture over time by being inclusive of homosexuals, race mixers, and even nonWhites. In their reasoning, perhaps because they are physical cowards themselves and fear the inevitable conflict coming, or perhaps because they sincerely want mixed race and homosexual persons to be included in a future White nation due to insecurities over theirs or their families' ethnic backgrounds or mental illness, they label those who are not as weak in their worldviews as “exterminationists” and “apocalyptic”.

Those who have been keeping up with demographic shifts and emerging socio-political trends, however, understand that something downright apocalyptic, and potentially exterminationist, is just over the horizon. Even civic nationalists such as Steve Bannon not only recognize this emerging truth, but are driven by it.

The Fourth Turning is a 1997 book by William Strauss and Neil Howe, two historians who describe the cycle of eighty year intervals in civilization. In their estimation, every trend and indicator demonstrates that the United States is headed towards a catastrophic crisis. According to their website, America experienced two prior Fourth Turnings, one in 1775, and the next in 1860. A third was defined by the stock market crash and global war. Therefore, the most likely outcomes of this current cycle, within a decade from the present day, is either economic collapse, revolution, or civil war. Or, all three.

Along with the MAJOR signpost along the way to Balkanization that came recently with California declaring itself a sanctuary state, the controlled media is recognizing that the country is becoming more and more divided, with no peaceful resolution in sight. A new article by Salon is the latest to point out that divorce now seems inevitable, whether through secession or civil war.

Chapter Six

ICANN stole StormFront.org's domain name. After 20 years of being one of the most active and productive internet resources for Whites, it will be a struggle to bring it back online. This, combined with the ongoing intense and concerted effort to deny the first amendment to our people online through deplatforming, make the warning I gave out almost a year ago especially poignant and urgent. Go to The ShieldWall Network website. Begin to network with and meet local patriots of like mind in your area. Get alternative contact information (e-mail, phone numbers, mailing addresses, rendezvous points and plans) set up with them NOW. It's coming.

And now, to once again say "I told you so":

Have you heard of ICANN? President Obama agreed to let oversight over the assignment of ISP numbers to specific websites go to an international consortium of foreign governments and advocacy groups. Loss of American hegemony over this crucial aspect of internet control could lead to de facto censorship by countries and organizations which do not share our commitment to freedom of speech. Watching the first Presidential debate between Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump, and the frenzied social media reaction to it, got me thinking. I know, dangerous, right?

What if you suddenly found yourself without the internet? How much would that hinder your access to news and information which you trusted? To what degree would you suddenly feel isolated from people who view the world as you do, from those who share your political perspective, for example? How would you react? Would you feel lost? Alone? Afraid? Anxious? Depressed? Blind? Cut-off?

Has your political activism devolved into a spectator sport? Are you just a voyeur and public complainer and biter, at this point? What would you be, without your modem and your smart phone? Are you merely wasting your life waiting for somebody else to do something that you can repost about and think of a clever remark to accompany? Is that what we've become?

I've written before about how the internet has been a two-edged sword, exponentially increasing the speed and breadth to which our ideas spread out and penetrate, even at less depth due to the white noise of information overload amid the universally leveled playing field of democratized "Enter" keys. The Overton Window of political discussion has been shifted towards nationalist and populist memes, while the need for physical organizations and their efficacy has been eclipsed through the educational and social function of online chatter. The echo-chambers encourage, reinforce, and radicalize new people as well as the best speech or most flamboyant demonstration at the U.S. Capitol I ever made could have, day after day. But how much have we lost, in our new dependence on the internet? How vulnerable have we become, due to our reliance on it?

What would you do, if you couldn't get online? Would you pick up the phone and try to call the few people whom you know, whose numbers you have? How many of them would you be able to connect with in real life? Without e-mail or IMs? How many do you know personally? For more immediate access, in case of a crisis situation, how many people have you networked with who are within an hour's drive of you? ICANN could mean a slow burn of access to websites which some foreign government feels is 'politically incorrect'. Many countries have 'hate speech' laws which are counter to our first amendment protection against censorship. Many multinational corporations, whose weight will be felt under ICANN, prefer silencing dissent to nurturing free debate, as well. But, that's not the only way we could lose the internet. Imagine an EMP attack which made most automobiles unusable by frying their electronics. How many friends do you have within walking distance? How many of your neighbors do you know? How many do you trust?

Think about how easily the internet could be pulled out from under us: your favorite forums and blogs becoming lost due to their numbers having been reassigned randomly by ICANN, the aforementioned EMP attack, a “temporary” Executive Order ostensibly designed to curtail online terrorist networking, martial law being declared, or the wholesale acquisition of control of the interwebs by multinational interests such as the U.N., which do not support freedom of speech. It might happen in one fell swoop, or piecemeal, as one website and forum disappears at a time. You might wake up one morning, and it all would be gone, or so heavily censored that it might as well be, as far as we’re concerned. Thousands of Indian and Pakistani IT professionals and their busy little brown fingers could make quick work of the few thousand websites and social media platforms which we depend on to stay informed and in touch. Are you willing to put all of your proverbial eggs in one basket? Isn’t that what we’ve already done?

What to do?... As my readers know, I never point out a problem, without also offering a solution to it. I heartily encourage offline networking. Brush up on your irl social skills. Find your local or county Republican Party, NRA supporters chapter, or Tea Party group, go to a meeting, and seek out the most radical members. You’ll know them when you see and hear them. They’ll sound like you did, before you got fully woke. Chances are, in every room, there’ll be a few of us. Work your way in without scaring them off, right off the bat. Be helpful, and offer to volunteer. Slip them the red pill. Get to know your local police force, find out which ones are the strongest defenders of local rule and the second amendment. Focus on the city and county level. Is there a shooting club in your area? Think about what kinds of people tend to be sympathetic to our cause: blue collar workers, agricultural producers, and the ex-military. People who have moved to your area from places more “diverse”. A high percentage of veterans are on our side. Try to know them, even if you haven’t served. Attend City Council sessions and School Board meetings. Get out and meet people. Call your old friends and reconnect. Make an effort to do some real world recruiting. Become an active part of your community, and a known person of influence, in a positive way. The day will come when the connections you make with local law enforcement, business owners, farmers, elected officials, and veterans will matter more than how many likes you have on facebook. The number of people you can talk into helping man a roadblock four blocks down to defend your neighborhood will be more important than the number of Twitter followers you can pile up. This is not a simulation. Something very real is coming, and we all need to remember that the balkanization will not happen online. That's not where we need to be most active. Like the old R.E.M. song says, "Stand in the place where you live."

Some day, the internet may no longer be there for us. If that does happen, and you get bored without your online games to play, come look me up. I'll hand you a shovel to dig pits with, or a rifle, to help me fill them.

Pat Buchanan writes repeatedly about the inevitability of an American breakup.

I will repeat this until southern Whites get it and get out. As more and more blacks move down from the cities of the northeast and midwest, such as New York and Chicago, and back to the deep south, White flight out of the darkening Dixie accelerates. This cyclical effect is being felt, and responded to, by growing calls for Black Nationalism in places such as Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, and Mississippi. Now, one of them is the Mayor of 80% black Jackson, the state capitol of Mississippi, and the largest city in the state.

The new Mayor-Elect, Chokwe Lumumba, is a proud member of the Malcolm X Grassroots Movement, which developed out of the New Afrika People's Organization, a militant black nationalist group founded by his father with the express goal of forming an independent black nation in the south called the Republic of New Afrika. The father didn't achieve that dream, but the son senses that balkanization is coming, and he's eager to make it come true, by any means necessary.

One major triggering event for civil war, race war, and balkanization would be a power grid collapse...

As I have previously written, there would not be a United States of America today, had it not been for foreign intervention on behalf of the secessionist rebels in the American War for Independence against Great Britain. In fact, I'm exploring the potential scenario of how the world may have been different had we remained a part of the British Empire in my new alternate history novel, 'Commonwealth', which was published last summer.

In 'The Balk', as well as in the fictional 'Hasten The Day' trilogy, I discuss how foreign military intervention could help break up the United States during our next civil war, as well. Our nation was born in bloody revolution encouraged and abetted by other countries, and it may very well die that way, too.

Now, the European Union has just openly and publicly threatened to encourage the breakup of the United States.

One, it's a major step towards balkanization for a foreign leader to talk about states seceding from the Union in such an overt manner, but it's even more of a sign of international acceptance of the inevitability of the coming breakup of the U.S. that its discussion, and threats to support America's balkanization, are being normalized in mainstream political discussion by heads of state and diplomats. That makes it far easier and more likely for European Union or United Nations peacekeeping troops to be sent to California at the request of its governor, for example, if they were hypothetically requested to help defend California from U.S. troops attempting to stop the state from seceding, or against federal law enforcement forces attempting to enforce U.S. immigration law there, even.

EthnoState

Of the many roadsigns along the way to balkanization, this is a HUGE billboard, folks.
Take notice. Things are moving along fast, now.

Chapter Seven

In multiracial, diverse states, human nature is a centrifugal force, pulling the competing demographic populations apart, while the central authority is the centripetal force, trying to hold the disparate groups together. This is why the government is your enemy, White man.

I don't oppose the Butler Plan, or the NorthWest Imperative as it's more recently called, out of any disrespect for Harold Covington or Pastor Richard Butler. The former I am cordial, even friendly, with, and respect; the latter I was a personal friend of for the last two years of his life, as we traveled and gave speeches and led demonstrations all over the country together. One helped me to understand the inevitability of America's balkanization, and the other helped me find my way back to faith as a Christian Identist. Both deserve the admiration and honor of every White patriot, whether one agrees with them, or not.

I don't oppose the 'Stand and Fight' credo of Southern Nationalists out of any disrespect for the League of the South or any of a dozen local and regional Klan organizations who believe that the Confederacy can be revived. I, my father, and both of my grandfathers were Klansmen. I was born and raised in the South, as was my family on both sides going back to a couple of generations prior to the War for Southern Independence. Many of my ancestors fought, and some died, for that noble lost cause.

My belief that New America will lie between the Appalachians and the Rockies, and from the Ozarks to the plains of Canada is based on simple demographics. I've spent years diligently analyzing census reports, internal racial immigration patterns, and birthrates. I've compiled and published them, too.

The results are clear. When America goes down, the Pacific Northwest, full of extremely liberal, left-wing Whites, will be facing a Chinese lake. If Whites want to make a stand there, they should learn to speak Mandarin.

Likewise, the Mississippi Valley and Black Belt stretching across the five states of the deep south will make it into what they are already calling 'New Africa'. Any late-coming Civil War reenactors there who want to whistle 'Dixie' had better make it the short version.

In a new article Southern Nationalist Hunter Wallace, a.k.a. Brad Griffin of the League of the South, a man certainly worthy of respect and admiration for his principled stand for our people, agonizes in a convoluted effort to define who a Southerner is, culturally and ethnically and geographically, so as to not draw too fine a line and limit his pool of potential supporters.

I suggest something even more noble than fighting for a lost cause, or taking a martyr's stand on the green graves of your sires, or around your local Confederate memorial monument.

New America: Your ancestors crossed oceans, mountains, and wildernesses to give their descendants, you, a better life. Won't you give your progeny the same shot?

In his blogpost on The Burning Platform, Fred Reed writes correctly that America has become two nations. Well, at least two, Fred. But, rather than believe that internal secession is the road to ruin, as you do, I think it's the only pathway to true freedom and self-determination. That's because, unlike you, I don't see the coming balkanization as strictly a political division of red vs. blue, but as an ethnic fragmentation of White, black, brown, yellow, and all the tans in between.

That being said, the author does make some very salient points to reinforce to normies, i.e., moderates and conservatives, the reality that America's differences are irreconcilable, and divorce is the inevitable and preferred outcome.

Fred ends his longish diatribe about how deeply divided and polarized the country is by asking, "Where does this lead?". I hope that's a rhetorical question cleverly designed to get non-red-pilled folks to come to their own inescapable conclusions. If not, you've got a lot of catching up to do.

Fueled by calls for secession and balkanization from both the right and the left, the idea that the United States of America is headed for a breakup is becoming more normalized and mainstreamed. Working from both ends towards the middle, many people are growing to accept the inevitability of a streamlined America.

Singer Charlie Daniels stated publicly that "it's only a matter of time before there's blood in the streets". In discussing the likelihood of another civil war, he wrote "...should these conditions continue, someday soon the violent elements of both persuasions will find themselves on the same streets, and what will ensue will not be pretty."

He and I are not alone. In fact, the people who have the most guns are growing convinced that soon they're going to have to use them. A new blog post on "The Truth About Guns" asks rhetorically whether the left's civil war will turn deadly.

EthnoState

All of these articles I've named aren't crucial to read in whole, my point in mentioning them is simply to point out that I'm not the lone nutjob talking about this. It's what all the cool kids are saying. Left, right, or indifferent.

Chapter Eight

Does it matter, really, exactly where the ethnostates are, or where their borders will lie? Does it matter whether they will be governed by National Socialism or a Monarchy or by something like the U.S. Constitution? These are things which we don't have control over right now, so arguing about them or demanding that only one answer is the right answer is unnecessarily divisive.

Ozarks – a Refuge for God's People in End Times

Here is a letter I just received from yet another White family which has recently moved to the Ozarks:

“Dear Mr. Roper,

I'm writing this in response to reading your book The Balk !

I am one of those people in your book who has seen the light . I am fifty-two and a white male now living in south central Missouri also known as the Ozarks . Having grown up on the south side of Peoria Illinois in the 70's and early 80's , I watched my neighborhood and others slowly become a cesspool as the black population continued to increase. I was able to move later across the river to East Peoria in 85. But by the year 2000 the demographics starting changing again for the worse. Thanks to people who wanted to cash in on FHA programs, rental homes and duplexes could be found everywhere. Again the schools our children went to also became a mess. Taxes for homeowners went through the roof. My house on a 50 x 150 lot became about $3500.00 a year. So my mortgage payment was about $1,050.00 a month. I saw the writing on the wall and decided to sell our home. I was fortunate enough to find a young liberal couple who wanted it. My house was a four bedroom three bath in an acceptable neighborhood. I asked them if they had kids and they said no. I then asked them why they wanted such a big home and they said they planned on becoming foster parents to Somalian kids . Any guilt I had for selling my home to them was soon replaced with satisfaction.

After my move here I was in awe about this wonderful place called the Ozarks! I could leave my keys in my truck at my place. I could carry my pistol on my side and no one batted an eye. I would have made the news in Illinois if I did that there. But I soon realized that I did not need to carry a pistol here because I am surrounded by white people who for the most part don't act like feral monkeys . So once I got here I immediately found work doing construction as I have always done. I work in about a 60 mile radius and was amazed that almost all of the customers I worked for were from other states. As I talked to them and ask why they moved and why here I would hear the same thing always . They were tired of what their states and towns had become. High crime, higher taxes, and the restrictions of the freedoms they once knew. Most all would explain in a manner to be politically correct until they felt comfortable with me, then of course the main reason would be the BLACKS.

As this should be no surprise to you, I was still taken back by all this. Just think, in my little neck of the woods this many people have migrated here. How many more whites are there that have moved here? I know from reading your book THE BALK you have documented facts that have shown this and after reading it recently, it confirmed what I have witnessed myself! That is why I contacted you and am grateful for you meeting with me. In closing I would like to wish you and your family a Merry Christmas!"

Every day I see more out of state license plates, primarily from the deep south, but from elsewhere, too, such as the upper Midwest a lot, adorning vehicles being driven by Whites. More and more they are not just retirees, but young families, too. They are moving to the Ozarks, making the predominantly White area even whiter, as there is no corresponding nonWhite immigration in to speak of. There is cause for caution that they have not brought any lingering White guilt with them, and won't try to remake our area into the one they escaped from, but so far the natives have maintained control. That happened in the Pacific Northwest due to liberal Whites fleeing California, and to a lesser extent in Harrison, Arkansas, due to the Chicago clique of former Mayor Jeff "carpetbagger" Crockett. Where I live, though, anyone not born here is "from off", and tolerated so long as they don't try to rock the boat too much.

Whites fleeing the darkening southeast are moving north to East Tennessee and the surrounding southern Appalachian area, too. With the exception of a few cities such as Nashville and Memphis that can be starved out or reduced by siege once we control the rural countryside, an almost contiguous band across the upper south is forming of overwhelmingly White and racially conscious territories. Ozarkia and Franklin may well meet in the middle, some day.

The question has often been asked of me by those who understand now that balkanization is coming, and that ethnostates are rising, how we can make it happen faster. The answer is to be the radical flank effect. Agitate relentlessly, provoke, trigger, polarize, balkanize. Promote segregation and division. Ridicule the left. Make sure there's nothing to your right but the wall. Encourage others along in their radicalization. Purity spiral. Set the standard. Above all else, confront our enemies. Get involved in public activism through the ShieldWall Network's phalanx or similarly trained and disciplined in real life boots-on-the-ground heroes. Black pill Civic Nationalists and turn them racial. Spread rebellion like an aerosol, consciously, every day.

What do you do to avoid burnout while you're waiting for the balkanization to happen? That's a thorny issue, and an old one. Is there despair in living in expectation of catastrophe, as one reader put it? Yes, there can be. One solution is to bury and busy yourself in activism, as you network in your community to become a person of influence. It's organically good for you and your family NOW to attend meetings and social events and make friends with the shot callers and decision makers around you. Meanwhile, work on making your home and property and secure, defensible, and self-sufficient as possible, just as all preppers do.

It may be controversial to some, who understandably have animosity towards all levels of law enforcement, but I still recommend getting to know your local and county police on a friendly level, so if it ever comes up, they have some actual knowledge and experience of you separate from the federal and media stereotype of us. Volunteer, help out with local charities, meet and get to know local elected officials such as Mayors and Sheriffs. Let them see you being a normal family person and good, solid citizen. Let them hear your voice and opinion on small things now, so you will be an insider when SHTF and they are deciding whether to barricade the highways at the county line in order to keep out refugees from the cities, or let them in.

Here are things to do while waiting on the apocalypse: Move to a White area which is part of a contiguous safe zone rather than just a surrounded enclave. Find a mate, get married, and make White babies. Buy some land, even just a few acres. Prepare it for sustainability. Grow a garden. Can the food you produce. Dig a pond to collect water if you don't have a well. Get some small livestock, such as chickens and goats. If you have enough room, get a horse. Learn to ride it. Buy a good reliable pistol and combat grade rifle and shotgun and hunting rifle, and work on stockpiling 1,000 rounds of ammunition for each. Work on alternative, quiet, non-fuel dependent power or power substitutes.

Go to city council and quorum court meetings. If you have kids in the local school, school board meetings, too. Make a point to meet all of your neighbors and introduce yourself. Be friendly. Start a neighborhood watch group. Perhaps ask around and find the most conservative church in your area, and attend it.

Be aware of your surroundings and the possibilities. Where is the nearest nonWhite population center? Where is the nearest prison? Locate the nearest stockpiles or sources of clean water, electric power production, propane, gasoline, food distribution warehouses, and other necessary resources to you. Imagine that in an emergency situation you were deputized and tasked with defending those resources from looters. What are the strengths and weaknesses in their positions and locations? If their defense was untenable and they had to be moved, how could you best transport them to a more defensible position?

I hope that most of you still reading at this point, near the end of the book, are active in the White Nationalist movement. If you are, and have been for some time, then you've seen a lot of people come and go. Many people treat it as a revolving door. They get frustrated when the revolution doesn't happen within six months of getting red pill'd, because everybody is the star of their own movie and too many of us are used to demanding instant gratification and cheap, easy fixes to problems. They lack stamina, or feel isolated and alone, and can't take it for the long haul.

The key to psychological well-being is to be white pill'd, knowing that the balkanization is not only inevitable, but good...at least, better than the alternative of growing authoritarian multiracialism as we become a minority and face genocide. The absolute best thing you can do is to network now with other White Nationalist preppers through organizations such as the ShieldWall Network, while you still can. Spend time together, make friends, socialize with them, and work out contingency plans for how you would rendezvous together if you lost modern communications and transportation.

So, what has changed since The Balk? Everything and nothing. It's closer now, and more certain. You've had three years to get ready, and do all of the things I advised in it and reiterate and amplify above. How far along have you come in getting ready?

If it takes me another three years, I doubt that there will be another update before it happens. If I'm wrong, I'll give you a free copy when the time comes. Until then, you can go to The Roper Report website at whitenationalists.com and the ShieldWall Network site at aryanwarrior.com to find all of the articles referenced in the past eighty pages in full through hyperlinks by searching for the key words in them, if you're so inclined. Or, you can just take my word for it. So, while the lights are still on:

EthnoState

1. Learn to garden. Practice growing your own fresh fruit and vegetables: plowing, sowing, watering, fertilizing, harvesting, and preparing produce. Pro-tip: trespassers grow great hothouse tomatoes! During World War II, these were called “victory gardens”. This time, that would depend on whose side you’re on.
2. Learn to butcher and prepare animals as food, from livestock to small game, from hooved to table ready. McDonald’s will be closed for the duration of the festivities. In case of prolonged power outages and natural gas shortages, practice cooking over an open fire.
3. Purchase and practice with firearms to the point of proficiency and confidence. Acquire a sufficient amount of ammunition for each. For a definition of “sufficient”, watch the climactic scene of the film “Zulu”. ZOG will get them outlawed, any way, and only outlaws will have guns.
4. Men, learn how to do small engine repair and maintenance, and basic carpentry, plumbing, and electrical work. Ladies, take up knitting, crocheting, or quilt-making. Your skills may be all that you have to barter, and the brothels will be full.
5. Locate the nearest warehouse locations to you of non-perishable food stores, as well as gasoline, diesel, and natural gas storage facilities. That’s right, you will be playing Mad Max. It won’t be theft, at that point. Think “commandeering” or “liberating”.
6. Find the nearest permanent water source to you, and learn how to haul, filter, and sterilize it for potability. No more Perrier. Giardia and Cholera will kill more people than bullets. “Hollywood” showers will be a thing of the past.
7. Acquaint yourself with alternate means of transport, such as bicycle, horse, biodiesel, or a wood gasifier propelled vehicle, for when the gas runs out or the EMP hits. Yes, Google that, cowboy. In consolation, there’ll be no more car washes, regardless. See number six.
8. Locate the nearest urban source of potential refugees and looters. If there are no clear avenues of withdrawal away from them through homogeneous areas, relocate now, while the roads are still passable. ‘White flight’ is not a bad word. Imagine every zombie apocalypse movie you’ve ever seen, then think racially. There you go.

9. Make a list of the people you know whom you trust. As in, alone with your wife when the food runs out and the lights go off, trust. Okay. You need to expand on that, don’t you? Network locally with like-minded or potentially useful people. Get to know your neighbors. The number of people you can talk into manning a roadblock barricade four blocks away to defend your neighborhood will matter more than the number of followers and likes you have on social media, once the internet goes down for the count.

10. You know that thing you kept expecting to read in this list, because you felt it was the most important thing, ever? Well, if it was so important, then why haven’t you done it, yet? Why do you need me to tell you that it’s time? Do it now.

And now, for the original...

Introduction

By Gregory Kay

-Gregory Kay was born to a blue-collar family in Point Pleasant, West Virginia, in 1958. A graduate of Point Pleasant High School's Class of 1976, he has held a wide variety of jobs, ranging from fur trapper to business manager, from white-water guide to police and security officer, from construction worker to martial arts instructor. Politically he is a Southern Nationalist, and has held state-level office in the League of the South, and state- and national-level positions with the Southern Party/Southern National Committee.

First published at the age of 19 in The West Virginia Woodsman, his fiction and non-fiction have been widely published in a variety of internet and hard-copy publications, including The First Freedom monthly newspaper, for which he is the West Virginia correspondent. Besides his own books, his works have also appeared in three Point Pleasant Writers' Guild anthologies.

Among his works are included the 'Third Revolution' tetralogy, 'The Barnacles of Aegir', 'Death In Dark Country', 'Wings In Darkness', and 'Dark Paths'.

In the interests of full disclosure, Mr. Kay and this author do disagree on one potential aspect of the coming balkanization of America. As a Southern Nationalist, he believes that the former Confederate states will regain their independence as a White nation. In his view, the fighting spirit, discipline, and superior grasp and use of technology (not least of which as it pertains to warfare and weaponry) will allow White Southerners to overcome their adversaries to a degree which will render the numerical disparity inconsequential. This is a more optimistic view than the one I hold, but not only do I respect his position, obviously, it is also my most fervent hope that it is he who is correct in this, rather than myself. There are some times when you just want to be wrong. This is one of them. Either way, here is Gregory, in his own words...

Introduction

I was both surprised and flattered to be asked by the author of this book to introduce his latest work. I was familiar with Billy Roper, of course; anyone in the White Nationalist community for any length of time has heard his name, but we knew each other via cyber-space, where we were casual acquaintances, although we've never met in person. That's why his request came as a bit of a shock, and the flattered part came when I found out he made it after reading one of my own books, THE THIRD REVOLUTION (And yes, I am aware that was a shameless plug on my part.). So, not to be outdone, since he'd read one of mine, I read two of his: HASTEN THE DAY and the pre-release copy of the one you now hold in your hand, THE BALK.

To make a long story short, Billy is one hell of a writer.

I have to admit that surprised me just a little too; when it comes to the White Nationalist fiction in this country, it's been my experience that a clumsy sawmill worker could count the ones who are actually good at it on the remaining fingers of one hand, and Billy is one of those. He turns out writing that (except for being so politically-incorrect that it makes leftists squeal like pigs and wet their frilly little lace panties) is on a par in quality to anything you're likely to find on the shelves of your local bookstore, and better than most.

No, we don't have a little writers' 'bromance' going on here; he and I have our differences of opinion, some of them serious, especially on the subjects of religion, the South, and most especially on what we Southerners are fully capable of doing if pushed into a live-and die corner. Still, that's all theory on both our parts, and we have a professional respect for one another, even if our respective research brings us to different conclusions.

Speaking of research, that's just what a good bit of THE BALK is. The author has amassed a pretty impressive collection of facts and figure, arranged it all in a readable fashion, and then laid out his conclusions and his advice to survive the scenario they've led him to believe is coming. While I may not agree with all his regional conclusions, I definitely agree that the tragedy looming on the horizon, of the breakup of America and of impending race war, is inevitable at this point.

Prologue: From the ‘Hasten The Day’ trilogy universe...

A Century After The Balk

His dog-eared copy of ‘Founding Father’s Son’ lay across the 2100 A.D. centennial translation of the Holy Bible, approved by the Church of Israel. The two official government publications were mandatory, but Thomas Jefferson McNabb was the kind of old-fashioned moderate who preferred to keep the volumes separate, rather than combined as the stricter denominations published them, these days.

Aside from his Great Grandfather’s biography and the scripture, T.J. didn’t own any other print books. The collected libraries of human history were available on demand as neural downloads, even for Organics like himself. If, like millions of others, he was willing to surrender his Numircan citizenship and undergo GeMO-therapy for the off-world colonies, memory enhancement was one of the several mutative options available.

For the colonies which required a greater phenotypic shift from the Organic base norm, of course, post-vitro mods were prohibitively expensive and complicated. The system-wide celebrity and dynastic heir-apparent had his niche in life chiseled out for himself before he was conceived, the old fashioned way. T.J. could no more have been preborn a Troll with a skeletal structure engineered to survive the gravity well of Bol' Shoy on Kepteyn b, or a Gill able to breathe the atmosphere on Gliese 832 c, than he could have been born an Asian. Of course, both of those colonies were a half a lifetime's flight away. The kids born with those mods had plenty of time to grow to maturity at half light speed before they arrived in the new worlds.

Royal and Noble families of Citizen and Taxpayer status were allowed unregulated reproductive privileges, but the Residence and Lumpen classes were eugenically matched to continue the Ethnicity Resegregation Initiatives which had been legislated by his grandfather, just before the Northern and Western Hemispheric Union.

First Citizen McNabb often sat a bit apart from his security at the Martyr's Park bench by the fountain, to savor the illusion of anonymity. He could watch the clusters of Celtic red-heads and blonde Nords and round-faced Slavs maneuvering around one another like schools of differently colored tropical fish, with smaller pods of darker Med and Alp subethnics darting in and out. Government run schools weren't ethnically segregated, yet, but the academic courses were customized to suit the different inherited personality types and proclivities of the subraces.

This morning, he had explained the diversification process to his son, G.W., again. The nine year old had ran in, winded from climbing a tree with the other boys who all felt like super-heroes in the lunar colony's low gravity, to ask why his friend Jimmy's big sister had to "marry a boy who looked like her."

T.J. had laughed. "Well, son, you've studied natural selection in Biology class, right?"

"Um, Yes, Sir. Kinda." George Washington McNabb said, hesitantly.

"Don't worry, I'm not going to test you, buddy," his dad reassured him, cutting up an apple and handing it to the boy, one slice at a time.

"Don't choke on that. Okay, here goes. All species differentiate, they specialize, within themselves, as different bloodlines within the bigger overall group develop different inherited traits, right? Like the pigeons, some became gray and could hide in the smog and survive, while the white ones got seen by the hawks and eaten?”

“I remember,” G.W. said, munching away.

“And, remember that some of those specializations are the result of climactic or other environmental adaptations, and some are accidental, and some are on purpose? The ones on purpose, we call ‘eugenics’?”

“Like the Trolls?” the youngster asked, wide-eyed. He had forgotten his apple slices for a moment.

“Yes, like the Trolls. So, the way that natural selection works is that the different sub-groups, or sub-species, within a species, all compete for territory and resources, to see which of them is the best adapted, the most fit, and has the best physical and mental traits needed to survive, right?”

“That’s what our teacher said. She says that’s why she has blue eyes,” the boy contributed. Finally, the last wedge disappeared.

“Well, she’s right. And the best suited, most favored, subspecies wins the natural selection contest. And what happens to the other subspecies, the other races, son? Remember?”

“They go extinct. Like dark-skinned people,” G.W. answered. “So, that’s natural?”

“Sure, it’s natural. You see, multiracialism, having more than one race mix together and especially to interbreed, well, that destroys the true diversity, the real genetic and inherited differences between different population groups, that nature requires for the natural selection process to continue. See?”

“Just like I made my apple gone? It’s extinct!” the royal heir asked.

“Kind of, but even worse, because instead of just being gone, what’s left is neither the same subspecies or race as the mother or the father. And all of the tens of thousands of years, or even longer, of adapting and evolving and adding recessive genes, is gone, buried in the more primitive, less evolved dominant genes, reverted back to the base form. All the hard work and sacrifices of all their generations of ancestors is lost, undone. Do you remember what ‘recessive’ means?” the man asked.

“It means newer, more recent, more advanced, right? Like the sharp edge of the knife you used to cut the apple, dad?”

“Very good. And if that edge is lost, if the most recent, most advanced, recessive genes are buried by mixing them back with the dominant, less advanced, less recent forms, like mixing recessive blue eyes with dominant brown eyes, ... well, it’s a step backward for the human species.”

“Hot pipe! I get it. So, why does she have to marry a boy who looks like her?” G.W. queried, trying to see the whole picture.

His dad smiled, ruffling his son’s hair. “Because, once all of the subspecies, or races, except for one have become extinct, the one surviving race becomes the new de facto species, son. Then the whole process of differentiation and specialization and competition between groups as a part of the ongoing natural selection process continues. The different ethnicities within that race become the new de facto races within the new de facto species. Like that knife edge, it’s a continual honing process, to keep us, humanity, constantly improving sharpening, evolving into something greater, and better. That’s God’s design. His will is for us to constantly improve ourselves as individuals and ourselves collectively as His children, through the process He created.”

“So, God wants them to get married?” the fifth grader wondered.

“You could say that. By marrying and having babies with people who are like us genetically, our own race and even our own ethnicity, we help to re-sort out the new species, and establish different races within the new species, who will compete with each other to see which is most fit. It just keeps going, forever, it has to, or we fall backwards.” came the patient response.

“Oh,” a light bulb came on in his mind, lighting his eyes. “So, what about the Trolls and Gills and the others? Are they new races, too?”

“Yes, they are, and they’re almost new species, already. Genetically, they’ve been modified so far away from the base, that they almost aren’t genetically compatible with Organics like you and me any more. Kind of like donkeys and horses make mules that are sterile, right?”

“That’s good.” the boy said, thoughtfully, wrinkling up his nose. “I’ve seen pictures of Troll girls, they’re uuuuuuuugggggggglllllllyyyyyyyyyy!”

“Probably they wouldn’t be if you were a Troll boy, though,” T.J. noted, grinning. His son made an exaggerated gagging noise.

“So, do they hafta?” the interrogation boiled down to. The father emphatically shook his head.

“No, son, nobody has to follow the reproductive laws. Or God’s laws, even. There are tax write-offs for those who do, and family subsidies if you fit certain genetic criteria...certain standards. But anyone who doesn’t want to live by our laws, can leave. They can take off with whomever they want, even, together, if they both decide to.”

“Where do people like that go, daddy?” his son’s pale eyebrows rose, imagining outlaws running off, hand in hand.

“Well, down in the Republic of Texas, people just have kids with whatever featherless biped they want to, willy-nilly. Even in Deseret, they generally marry anybody their church approves of. Usually more than one, at that. So, they’re welcome there, too, if they convert.”

“What about on the other colonies? Do they follow birthing laws?”, G.W. asked. He looked up, past the lunar dome, towards the stars.

“Of course ours do, but like in Texas and Argentina and Deseret, most of the orbital platforms and new worlds don’t. At least not yet. A couple of them even allow homosexuals to marry.”

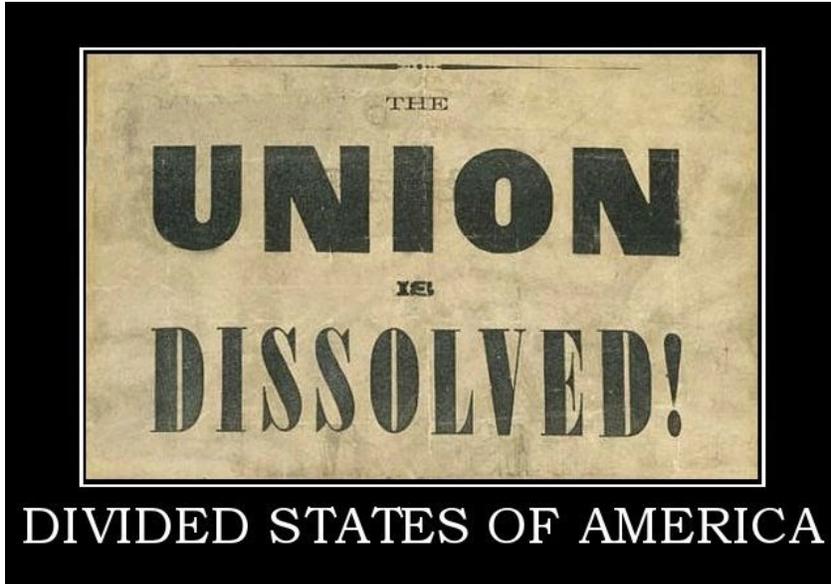

“I guess that means that our way of doing things is competing with theirs, too, to see which is best, huh, dad?”

“Right. And we’ll let God decide which way is truly His will, son. That’s all we can do, is leave it in His hands.”

That gave his son something to think about while he ran back outside to climb up into that moon tree again and explain things to his friend.

It was difficult for anyone, of any age, to come to grips with the understanding that at long last, a portion of humanity had control over its own destiny, and held its own future. Even for the Speaker. Finally, there was a rope over the abyss, and only eyes such as his could see what awaited on the other side. Man was something which was being overcome. While science had handed him the power to manipulate the intelligence levels and personality types and physical attributes of the next generation, he would not. The responsibility of the higher man was to sort them out, and let God and His nature judge.

Chapter One

Pleased to meet you, hope you guess my name.

"Balkanization means to me what will inevitably happen. Different Races cannot be forced to live together. The only natural and peaceful way for different Races to live is separately. I believe that Racial separatism leads to peace. Balkanization will cause conflict at the beginning, but once we are all separated naturally then we will have harmony. You cannot enforce harmony and make different Races live together who are not supposed to. It only leads to Racial tension and conflict as you see today in multiracial societies all around the world. All Races would be a lot happier living independently in their own Racially homogenous Nations. Anything else is abhorrent and unnatural."

~Mark from Australia~

Balkanization. Some of you may have read or heard the word before. To others, it might be new, and sound alien. One of those two dollar words used by politicians and lawyers or medical doctors. The kind of word you ignore, like the side effect warnings at the end of pharmaceutical commercials. Balkanization. It has a lot of syllables. It sounds kind of like it might be the root word for our term 'to Balk', a word meaning ‘to hesitate or be unwilling to accept an idea or an undertaking’. That definition might be more appropriate to people’s reaction to the reality and our imminent and inevitable future, but it’s not actually the word we’re looking for itself, or the correct definition. In the future, we might very well refer to what is going to happen in the past tense as ‘The Balk’, as verbal shorthand, but that will carry a different meaning, except for those who wish then that it had happened sooner. Words, of course, have objective, non -socially constructed meaning. They are symbols of their own origin, and within that linguistic DNA, hide the traces of their essence.

What, then, does ‘Balkanization’ mean? Let’s break the word down. In origin, it comes from a reference to the Balkans, the area of southeastern Europe which, up until the 1990s, we referred to as Yugoslavia, for a while. Some of you might remember what happened there. If you do, hold onto that thought for a minute. So, Balkanization means, ‘to become like the Balkans’, in one sense. What, then, are the Balkans like?

Well, the Balkans have always been a divided and contentious area of the European continent, being at the cultural and religious crossroads of Catholicism, Orthodox Christianity, and Islam. The Muslim invaders made it that far, and got stopped, but they stayed, in the southern half of the region. Some of them today are the descendants of forcibly converted Whites. Some are of mixed, part Turkic ancestry.

Not inconsequentially, among the non-Muslim population, there is a further division between Alpinids of a central European type, like the Croats, and Slavs, of the eastern European type, like the Serbs. And, of course, lots of people who are mixtures of the three; Bosnians, Kosovoans, Hercegovians, even Albanians and Macedonians. These many groupings have often led to genocide, on both sides, even absent any other differences. So much for unity through diversity. The Croats sided with Germany in W.W.II, and use the same alphabet as us, and are mainly Catholic. The Serbs sided with the Soviet Union, and use the Cyrillic alphabet. They are primarily Eastern Orthodox in religion. Both have their own spoken language, as well. They hate each other.

Pan-Slavism, by the way, the international effort to unite all Slavic people. was a major force behind the Serbian independence movement of one hundred years ago, which led to the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand of Austria. This event kicked off W.W.I when Germany backed up Austria and Russia backed up Serbia through the system of entangling alliances. W.W. I sowed the seeds of W.W.II, after which Yugoslavia became a Soviet puppet state. The history of not playing well with others is as sharp in the Balkans as anywhere in the world. Dr. Tomislav Sunic, a former Croatian diplomat and White Nationalist academician who was one of the founding faculty of the Soldiers of the Cross Training Institute, has written extensively on his nation's history, in that regard. Thomas Chittum, who served as a mercenary in the Yugoslavian Civil War on the Croat side, has written extensively about the lessons we should learn from that conflict in his seminal 'Civil War Two: The Coming Breakup of America'. Of particular interest in his work are the prophecies of what will happen in, and to, ethnic enclaves once cleansing begins.

History is full of multiracial societies which have always imploded into racial civil war and collapse, if they haven't eventually degraded through racial amalgamation. Those are the ONLY two long-term end results of multiracialism. The ONLY two choices. Just as the United States is more divided racially and culturally and politically than it has ever been since the last Civil War, the pattern we are now following is not unique. It happened in the Austria-Hungarian Empire. It happened in the Ottoman Empire, where Kemal Ataturk purposefully dismantled their multiracial state and downsized it into Turkey, following the first world war. It happened, even, to the Soviet Union. Multiracial empires are by definition unstable. Homogeneous states, where people share a common race, ethnicity, language, culture, and religion, by definition, are more stable. Diversity is not a strength, it is a weakness. Unity and diversity are antonyms, and antithetical concepts.

President Bill Clinton bombed Serbia during the Yugoslavian Civil War of the 1990's, because as a multiracial empire itself, those who rule the United States prefer to blame one specific side in any conflict: the Hutus rather than the Tutsis in Rwanda, for example, rather than recognizing and acknowledging that diversity is the cause of conflict. That's why Slobodan Milosevic faced war crimes trials. That's why we need a bad guy, always, to scapegoat, both internationally and domestically, whenever two diverse groups clash due to having markedly different interests and goals. Admitting that nature abhors multiculturalism even more than it does a vacuum would be very problematic for those singing 'Kumbaya' to their multi-racial subjects from Washington.

According to recent polls, not only do most Americans understand that our nation is more divided than it has been within memory, many also do not believe that the United States as we know it will still exist as one nation a single generation from now. For those whose heads are still in the sand, History is once again a willing teacher. The past is full of events, wars and revolutions, governments rising and falling, that very few would have predicted, shortly before they happened. Who would have thought that the Soviet Union would collapse inwards on itself without a single missile being fired, as recently as 1985? Or that the Berlin Wall would come down, without a shot? Of course, in the morning's light of hindsight, twenty-twenty vision often makes these changes seem to have been inevitable. So, too, will the collapse of the United States seem to those who survive it, once it has happened. We are fortunate in having the prescience to see it coming, and as much as is possible prepare to position ourselves, physically and politically, to take advantage of the change which is on its way. The fall of multiracialism. The contemporaneous rise of racially specific mini-states in its absence. And one of them being, our new White republic. Our New America.

The political definition of Balkanization, then, taken from the Balkans, where such infighting and conflict has ruled, is quite simply the breakup of a larger multiracial or multiethnic state into smaller, more racially, culturally, ethnically, and religiously homogeneous (similar) nations. As the Irish poet Yeats wrote, 'Things fall apart. The centre cannot hold. The blood dimmed tide unfurls, and everywhere, the ceremony of innocence is drowned...and the best lack all conviction, while the worst are full of passionate intensity.'

In the United States, the Balkanization process is not just one of political, cultural, and religious separation. Indeed, the very real re-migration of the races within the borders of this nation are furthering the re-segregation of the peoples who make up the country, and accelerating the ongoing Balkanization, as the centripetal force that has held us together weakens. Things fall apart. The center cannot hold.

Blacks from large urban areas in the Northeast and Midwest are moving back to the Southeastern corner of the United States, to the former Dixie, due to crime and poverty up North, crime and poverty which are caused by the blacks themselves, so they can no more escape them than a person carrying the black death could escape the plague. Likewise, Hispanic immigrants, both legal and illegal, are flooding into the southwest and border states like a brown tide, ostensibly to escape the kind of third world economy that is created by, well, third worlders. It's not that they fail to understand that third world countries don't make inferior people, inferior people make third world countries. They know that fact all too well. That's why they flood into White created countries parasitically. Cubans don't try to float to Haiti. Mexicans don't try to climb the fence to get into Guatemala. The flow of the tsunami is one directional, like Harry Styles...right at us. Only White liberals believe, or pretend to believe, that race and culture and economics are separate factors without mutual causation.

As more blacks move into the Southeast, and more Latrinos move into the Southwest, more Whites move out. It's White flight, on a grand scale. Rather than just moving out of the inner cities, or from one suburb to another, to escape 'crime', or 'urban blight', or for 'better schools', or some other namby-pamby liberal euphemism for getting away from the lower primates, Whites are moving to different counties, and commuting for hours each way. Many of them are pulling up roots and moving out of state entirely. In fact, that's been the leading trend for over a decade, now. As the numbers I present will show, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, from 2000 to 2010 millions of White people moved out of the deep South to the upper South, and out of the Southwest to the upper West. They moved out of Georgia to Tennessee. They moved out of Mississippi, to Arkansas. They moved out of California, to Wyoming and Montana and Idaho.

The net effect of this ongoing and accelerating internal remigration has been the beginning of a very real racial segregation of the United States, voluntarily. From the Appalachians to the Columbia Plateau, the United States is becoming whiter in terms of percentage of population, as the Southeast becomes blacker and the Southwest, browner. Both coasts are diverse to the point of polyglot cacophony. These five distinct regions are evolving in very different directions, and the speed at which this occurs increases with every race riot, every demonstration, every shooting, and every flag or monument controversy.

This is especially the case when one removes from the map the isolated urban enclaves of nonWhites in the Midwest, as will doubtless occur when America breaks up and those cities are surrounded by rural White areas uninterested in continuing to provide them with electric power, food, or running water. Imagine, if you will, the demographics of a Missouri without St. Louis or Kansas City. An Illinois, without Chicago and its environs. The bubbles these racial enclaves create may dominate state politics in those Midwestern states right now, due to the number of votes and the amount of Federal dollars they generate, but when neither voting nor the Federal government matter, any more, neither will they, or the people in them.

Many people decide to move whenever the controlled media shows a riot on their evening news, but others hesitate. They want to wait until the real estate prices are better, not recognizing that the more nonWhites enter their area, the lower price their house will fetch on the market, as property values plummet. Others want to wait until their kids are out of school, which leads to those kids forming roots in the diverse areas, and often having grandchildren there, further tying people to the invaded region. Some want to wait until they retire. Some want to wait until they save up enough money. Some may be waiting to find the perfect job in a Whiter area, or a perfect house. What they might be surprised by, is that The Balk may not wait for them. Those who are caught behind the enemy lines when the Balkanization begins, will wish they had moved sooner.

Popular culture has often been a barometer of not just social, but political trends. During the Cold War, people sensed the internal rot within our own system spreading, and turned to movies like 'Red Dawn', where collaborating politicians and gun controllers were depicted as just as much enemies of our nation as Soviet troops. Hundreds of books depicted a nuclear Armageddon, and the life after it, wherein the survivors would have a chance to start over. Today, society's reboot button is depicted in Zombie Apocalypse movies, so much so that a popular expression has become "the hardest thing about the apocalypse will be pretending that I'm not excited". Not only do few people envision our nation lasting another decade, most people only half secretly hope that it doesn't. Especially those who are the most patriotic, and who love our nation and our people the most. With Whites overall becoming a smaller percentage of the overall population every day, it's not difficult to understand why. The sooner the inevitable happens, the more of our people will survive, and the more territory we will hold onto for our new nation. Multiracial democracy cannot fly. What cannot fly, must fall.

On my 'Radio New America' program on White Pride Radio, I spent well over a solid year going over the demographic trends, analyzing their drivers and assessing their impact. In my near future fiction trilogy of books, 'Hasten The Day', 'Waiting For The Sun', and 'Wasting The Dawn', I used a more accessible narrative to spread the meme to a wider and more diverse audience. But some of the biggest obstacles to migration to the right areas of New America are not the Pioneer Little Europes, or P.L.E.'s, such as the ones in Montana and the Dakotas, which are right where they need to be. Those communities of mutually supportive White Nationalists are doing yeoman's work for our people, and it is my sincere hope that they will continue to grow into centers of cultural and political power for our folk. The two biggest hindrances are, as I see it, firstly, the misconceptions of those who dream of the Pacific Northwest, and secondly, a misplaced native patriotism.

As to the first issue, another White Nationalist fiction writer, Harold Covington, has promoted the idea of a new White nation-state rising in Washington, Oregon, and Idaho. To be fair, the idea was first espoused by Pastor Richard Butler and others. With all due respect to the honorable and otherwise praiseworthy patriots who promote the 'Northwest Imperative' ideal, that dog just won't hunt. Those readers who have visited Portland and Seattle, and know just how extremely liberal the White residents in those two cities which largely dominate the region are, understand why. Yes, it's a White area. An anti-White White area. If no one has noticed, that region also borders a rather large body of water I'd like to call their attention to, one which will be dominated by China once America goes down and a political vacuum exists there. Let me be clear, when Balkanization occurs, the Pacific Ocean will become a Chinese lake, just as I discuss in 'Hasten The Day'. The loss of the U.S. consumer market for their products will only make the Chinese acquisition of new territory and resources more desperately motivated. That's precisely why Japan began their Imperial acquisitions in the late 1930s, after we embargoed petroleum and steel sales to them. I don't know if Harold Covington can speak Mandarin, yet, but if not, he'd better learn it.

The Chinese, ostensibly to protect the large Chinese population in the Bay Area of California and elsewhere if the U.S. Federal government is no longer able to insure their safety, or perhaps as peacekeepers, with or without blue helmets, will most likely come to the U.S. West coast, and stay to fight the Mexicans for it. We'll throw our hat in the ring to reclaim it once New America has reconsolidated our strength and resources, but that might take a few years. When it happens, by the way, as I wrote of in the sequel to 'Hasten The Day', 'Waiting For The Sun', then and only then will we get the Pacific waterfront back.

So, the 'Northwest Imperative', in this author's mind, is a bad idea. Likewise a bad idea, in my opinion, is the League of the South's dream of resurrecting Dixie. As a proud Southerner, and a grateful descendant of those who fought and killed and died for the Confederacy, I don't say this with any particular glee, but the deep South is in all likelihood going to be, initially, New Africa. Those Whites who think otherwise are optimistic, to say the least. When America goes down, and all bets are off, the black street gangs and mobs of looters will spread out from the cities just as far as Whites will allow them. Observing White behavior in recent years, including Southern Whites, I'm not overly impressed with the likelihood that they will stand up to them soon enough to keep much territory- with the possible exceptions of a few enclaves on the Gulf coast and in a couple of mountainous areas. Otherwise, those who can, should leave the deep South, now. Remember Ferguson, and Baltimore, and take a very careful look at a map of the Southern U.S., paying particular attention to the route between where you live, and New America. One or two counties which are majority White won't hold out. This is not a Civil War reenactment. This will be total genocide. Plan accordingly.

Rest assured, the way that a nuclear fission explosion happens is that atoms are concentrated and pushed together into such a limited space that they eventually explode outwards with tremendous force, and similarly, we, White Americans, those who built this nation and for whom it was established, will take it back. But if the victorious White forces reconquer a temporarily lost area of the nation a decade after the Balkanization, when blacks and Mexicans have proven unable to feed themselves or maintain civilization or a standing army deserving of the name, and all they find are your bodies, you won't derive much pleasure from the event. Live to see the victory. Don't be a martyr.

“What kind of event might be the trigger for the final Balkanization?” That's a question I'm often asked by readers. Generally, people have in mind an economic collapse, stock market panic, EMP attack, electric grid failure, pandemic virus, or war with a foreign nation in mind, when they think of what might push the U.S. past the tipping point. Others might anticipate that Hispanic secession or revolt may occur, ripping the final threads holding together the fabric of our body politic, once their percentage of the population grows to a certain level in concentrated areas. Demonstrations or protests might turn into race riots that could get out of hand, and spread from one city to another, on any given hot summer night. A hate crime, in one direction or another, could result in growing waves of reprisals. An openly tyrannical government might declare martial law or strip citizens of their second or first amendment rights, triggering a rebellion. U.S. military and police units, largely racially mixed, would not be immune to internal divisions. But those are all best case scenarios. It's also possible that the Balkanization might occur more slowly and organically, and gradually take effect without an abrupt social or political change.

Senators, Representatives, and of course state legislators often just do the bidding of their constituencies. That's how they get re-elected, and their jobs depend on it. When those constituencies and their interests change, so do the loyalties of certain elected officials. Perhaps not even as often as they should, but often enough. It is possible that politicians of states becoming more and more White may eventually forward White interests, even to the point of withdrawing from a weakened Federal government. They could combine, or Confederate, with one another, regionally. And for those who don't think that secession ever works, I'll remind you of what we celebrate on July 4th. So, Balkanization COULD happen relatively bloodlessly. That's not the way that I would bet, but it could happen. Why not?

But while all of the interest in prepping and survivalism is at heart a preparation for a racial war, very few people come out and say so. Take a poll of your friends, asking them what they think would happen if, for example, the electric grid failed. What if the lights went out, and didn't come back on? How long would it be before looting started? How long before the violence escalated into open conflict? People aren't as afraid of hurricanes and tornadoes, as they are of the black tsunami. Especially if they live near the 'coasts' likely to be affected. Going inland is good advice.

Chapter Two

Crunching The Numbers

“Balkanization is the regional, political, cultural, religious, and racial separation of one ethnic group from another.” - Seamus O'Dubhlainn

Stick with me, now, this is where it gets dry for a minute, but these demographic statistics really matter, as you'll soon understand. Let's look at Yankee land, first, with Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania:

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, between 2000 and 2010, the black population in Connecticut increased from 295,571 to 335,119. During the same decade, the Hispanic population in Connecticut increased from 320,323 to 479,087. And, during the same ten years, the White population in Connecticut decreased from 2,638,845 to 2,546,262.

By percentage, from 2000 to 2010 the black population of Connecticut increased by 13.3%, while the Hispanic population of Connecticut increased by 49.5 percent. The White population of Connecticut decreased by 3.50%.

Asians went from 81,564 to 134,091, an increase of 64.3 % percent.

EthnoState

The black population in Maine increased from 6,440 to 15,154. During the same decade, the Hispanic population in Maine increased from 9,360 to 16,935. The White population in Maine increased from 1,230,297 to 1,254,297.

From 2000 to 2010 the black population of Maine increased by 135.3% percent, while the Hispanic population of Maine increased by 80.9% percent. The White population of Maine increased by 1.95% percent.

Asians went from 9,014 to 13,442, and increased 49.1% percent.

The black population in Massachusetts increased from 318,329 to 391,693. The Hispanic population in Massachusetts increased from 428,729 to 627,654. The White population in Massachusetts decreased from 5,198,359 to 4,984,800.

In other words, the black population of Massachusetts increased by 23.0% percent, while the Hispanic population of Massachusetts increased by 46.3% percent. The White population of Massachusetts decreased by 4.10% percent.

Asians went from 236,786 to 347,495 and increased 46.7% percent.

We could continue on, state by state, but you get the idea of how the numbers work. We first find the data telling us the raw numbers of increase or decrease by different racial groups. Then we can determine through a simple formula what percentage of increase or decrease that represents. Let's cut to the chase and highlight the most anomalous results from the 2010 Census data.

Pay attention to what is happening in the Southeast. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, between 2000 and 2010, the black population in Georgia increased from 2,331,465 to 2,910,800. During the same decade, the White population in Georgia increased only from 5,128,661 to 5,413,920.

By the percentages, that means that from 2000 to 2010 the black population of Georgia increased by 24.8%, while the White population of Georgia increased by 5.5 percent. That's a net gain by blacks of nearly 20%. Twenty percent! If you think that's something, the black population in Florida increased from 2,264,268 to 2,851,100. During the same decade, the White population in Florida increased only from 10,458,509 to 10,884,722. So, from 2000 to 2010 the black population of Florida increased by 25.9%, while the White population of Florida increased by 4.0 percent. That's a net gain by blacks of 22%, the highest gains by blacks in any state relative to Hispanics and Asians and Whites combined, nationwide. That wasn't the result of higher birth rates, as much as it was blacks moving there, who in 2000 had resided in other states.

Alabama and Mississippi both experienced net black gains of 6%, by comparison, showing that the core of the black internal remigration has been to Georgia and Florida. They will form the heartland of New Africa. If I were a betting man, I'd wager that Atlanta will be the capitol.

Now, let's look at the growth of the Latino population in the border states and the Southwestern U.S.. It's been even greater than the explosion of the black population in the Southeast. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, between 2000 and 2010, the Hispanic population in Texas increased from 6,669,666 to 9,460,921. During the same decade, the White population in Texas increased from 10,933,313 to 11,397,345.

In other words, the Hispanic population of Texas increased by 41.8% percent, while the White population of Texas increased by 4.2% percent. That's a net Hispanic gain of 37%, NOT counting illegal immigrants. Imagine what the percentage of growth would be, if the Census counted illegal immigrants? The black and Asian populations held virtually steady.

Moving west, the Hispanic population in New Mexico increased from 765,386 to 953,403. The White population in New Mexico increased from 813,495 to 833,810. From 2000 to 2010 the Hispanic population of New Mexico increased by 24.5% percent, while the White population of New Mexico increased by 2.4% percent. That's a net Hispanic gain of 22%, not counting illegal immigrants.

On August 14th, 2014, The New York Times website published an online article featuring a map of the United States showing where immigrants to those states came from. Focusing on the period from 1900 to 2012, it doesn't accurately show the massive changes that have occurred just since 1965 when the Hart-Cellar immigration act opened up the borders. It does, however, give a much broader, big picture overview of general trends. Twenty-eight percent of the population of California, for example, was foreign born over the last century. Over the last generation, though, the shift has been even more stark.

The Hispanic population in Arizona grew almost as much as that of Texas, from 1,295,617 to 1,895,149, from 2000 to 2010. During the same decade, the White population in Arizona increased from 3,274,258 to 3,695,647. That's an increase by 46.2%, while the White population of Arizona increased by 12.8 percent, a net Hispanic gain of 34%, not counting illegal immigrants. The Tucson Unified School District has already begun running elementary and secondary education courses in "race studies", at taxpayer expense, which teach youngsters to hate Whites, and love "La Raza", their own race, which they believe have a right to the SouthWestern United States as their own independent nation.

And of course, even taking into consideration the growth in the Asian population in California, Latrinos increased there from 10,966,556 to 14,013,719. The White population in California decreased from 15,816,790 to 14,956,253. So the Hispanic population of California increased by 27.7% percent, while the White population of California decreased by 5.4% percent. A net Hispanic gain of 22%, not counting illegal immigrants. Most of the 5% loss in the White population from California turned up in other states, as we'll see here in a couple of pages.

On some of the government demographic paperwork, for example in Census forms, it only gives one the option of choosing the Mexican subcategory in the White category. Think that could factor in on the comparative percentages, as well? Of course it does. Meaning, the relative growth of the Latrino population in the border states is probably even greater than these numbers indicate, due to the possibility of Rachel Dolezal style self-identification. Also, some Hispanics identify under the 'American Indian or Alaskan Native' category, or even under Asian / Pacific Islander ...which they actually ARE, of course, but still, it begs credulity, and muddies the waters considerably. And remember, these Census figures cannot account for the millions and millions of illegals in all states.

By now, dear reader, I'm sure that you're ready for some good news, right? Well, rest assured, there is some good news. It consists of the turnaround of the generalized national trend towards a declining White percentage of the population in the Western and Midwestern states. Because, all of those White folks missing from the Southeast and Southwest are going somewhere. Where, exactly? Largely, North. To the upper South, Midwest, and West. To the Heartland of America, the red states, to what the blue states on the diverse coasts and corners call 'Flyover Country'. To New America.

Largely because of the demographic outlier of Chicago, the Black population of Illinois decreased by 1.25% percent, while the Hispanic population of Illinois increased by 32.4% percent., and the White population of Illinois decreased by 3.04% percent. The winner there is the Hispanics.

In Indiana, it was almost a dead heat, as the black population increased by 15.1%, while the Hispanic population of Indiana increased by 15.1% percent as well, and the White population increased by 1.28 percent.

The other agricultural states experienced a flood not only of Hispanic farm workers and their families, but poultry and pork processing plant employees, too. The Black population of Iowa increased by 43 percent, while the Hispanic population grew by an astounding 83.7% and the White population of Iowa decreased by 0.34 percent. Similar results exist in Kansas and Nebraska.

To illustrate the black migration out of Detroit back to the southeast, from 2000 to 2010 the black population of Michigan actually DECREASED by 1.30% percent, while the Hispanic population of Michigan increased by 34.7%, and the White population of Michigan decreased by 3.03 percent. Asians had a large increase in Michigan, 175,311 to 236,490, which amounts to 34.8%.

So, even though the anticipated actual increase in the White percentage of the population between the Appalachians and the Rockies hasn't resulted in a statistical demographic shift as yet, the relatively lesser White displacement in future New American states reflect a comparative difference in the rate of internal migration, as well as its nature. This is analogous to several cars lined up in a race. One which decides to turn around and head in the other direction first has to downshift, then brake, then make a U-turn, rather than simply stopping on a dime and making a 180.

Now, the first figure I went for was the most increase in White population, period, as a starter, close to or at 10% percent or higher. Check out the results:

Utah increased its White population by 16.6% percent from 2000 to 2010.

Arizona increased by 12.8% percent.

Idaho increased by 15.5% percent.

Nevada increased by 12.2% percent.

South Carolina increased by 11.7% percent.

Wyoming increased by 10.2% percent.

North Carolina increased by 10.2% percent.

Colorado increased by 9.92% percent.

Obviously, while in most Western and Midwestern states the White percentage of the population either almost held steady with the increasing nonWhite population, or the increasing nonWhite population was in states with such a low population, as in the Dakotas, that the shift represented a relatively few actual number of persons, the states with actual INCREASES in the White percentage of the population from 2000 to 2010 are North Carolina, South Carolina, Colorado, Wyoming, Alaska, and Hawaii. That's not exactly the numbers or geographic distribution I'd anticipated, but it is the data I was looking for.

Here is why: Overall, the states with the greatest increase in their relative percentage of White population are Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho. States where the White population has begun a similar turnaround include Utah, and North and South Dakota (especially North, due to the shale fracking boom). That IS exactly what my Balkanization theory anticipated.

Therefore, the internal migration of Whites from the border states which are being overran by Hispanics are headed for Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, and the Dakotas. Whites who are fleeing the Southeast are going a state or two north, to the Carolinas, Tennessee, and Arkansas. But of course even within any particular state, the majority of internal remigration never crosses state lines. Most Whites simply move out of the city, and into more White areas. But the value and extent of the voluntarily racial segregation is still just as valid, even if no state lines are crossed.

In his article 'Balkanization Beckons', Pat Buchanan stated that "If a country is a land of defined and defended borders, within which resides a people of a common ancestry, history, language, faith, culture and traditions, in what sense are we Americans one nation and one people today?" He further quoted Founding Father John Jay, who stated in The Federalist Papers No. 2,

"Providence has been pleased to give this one connected country to one united people — a people descended from the same ancestors, speaking the same language, professing the same religion, attached to the same principles of government, very similar in their manners and customs ..."

Does this still describe America? If not, are we, collectively, all still America? Buchanan agrees that the United States of America is headed towards a breakup along racial lines, for many of the same reasons we've already outlined.

In addition to simply counting the demographics, we also need to watch events unfolding in the overall culture, economy, society, and the armed forces. In "Civil War Two: The Coming Breakup of America", the Balkan example is cited, again and again. The author, Thomas Chittum, fought as a mercenary in the civil war in Yugoslavia. Drawing from his experiences there, and his study of History, he observed:

"Did anyone write a book predicting our first civil war? I did some research on that subject and I was unable to find a single book warning Americans that they were fast approaching an abyss. That's not to say that people were unaware of the approaching war. In fact, many people were perfectly aware that a civil war was inevitable. My guess is that not a single person wrote a book on the coming war because they thought it would be a sort of picnic with a little gunfire mixed in, and in any case it would be over in a few months. As history records the war ground the entire southern half of America into a smoking wasteland and killed or crippled almost an entire generation of American men."

Indeed, over 620,000 died and the nation and its government were changed forever. But, people were in denial. No one wanted to admit that it was coming, even after the war became an inevitability. Chittum believes that, with an economic depression and grid collapse accompanying a racial civil war, as many as half of the current U.S. population might starve to death during the coming conflict. That may be optimistic. What would you do to feed your family if there were no more groceries on the store shelves, or gas at the service station? What about six months afterwards? With three hundred million others, all thinking the same thing? It's something to consider. It's no wonder that so many people are in denial about this coming civil war, too.

Over twenty years ago, the term 'Balkanize' was first used in examining the long-term impact of immigration to America by Dr. Brent Nelson, in his book 'America Balkanized: Immigration's Challenge to Government'. Having spent a lot of time discussing the issue with that author, both before and after he invited me to speak to a patriotic meeting he held subsequent to the work's publication, I can attest to his reputable and scholarly approach to the subject matter. Dr. Nelson's extremely well researched book, though now in need of an update, helped to break the ground of discussing how immigration would destroy our nation, if left unchecked. He was the first to amass the demographic statistics to back up his observations, which were crucial as empirical evidence at the time. Dr. Nelson set the precedent which so many have followed, from Pat Buchanan and Thomas Chittum, to little ole me. So, he deserves a fair portion of credit, and should not be overlooked.

Now, here's a thought that we can roll around in our minds, a point that Thomas Chittum missed when he wrote "Civil War Two". That's surprising, considering his otherwise obsessive attention to the international elites and the bankers and their Machiavellian machinations. The original, first use of the term 'Balkanization' was as a description of the 19th century Imperial Russian policy of purposefully dividing up the peoples of the Balkan peninsula at the edge of their sphere of influence. The Czars quite intentionally set the contentious parties against one another, to keep their frontiers fragmented and disunited. Divide and conquer, literally. So, Balkanization wasn't merely an occurrence, it was a program and policy. It was the Russian management style.

Chittum almost arrives at the same conclusion when discussing our own situation. He alludes to the fact that the global power elites, whom he never identifies by name or ethnicity, might foment Balkanization in order to institute martial law, disarmament of civilians, and the institution of an even more tyrannical government following a racial civil war. What those hoping to profit from chaos may be naïve about, however, is their ability to control the forces they unleash. Their gated communities and armed guard won't protect them when the black and brown hordes sweep through. Once they let the genie out of the bottle, it won't be easy to put back in.

Of course, over and over again their hubris, their driving ego, has caused them to overstep their abilities to control the situation, as happened in Germany in the 1930's. They are not omnipotent or omniscient. They aren't even united, and they don't always win. With the nature of modern warfare and global communications, it's a smaller world. This time, if they encourage war and destruction for profit and power, someone just might finish the job.

For those who would like to see where the nearest concentrations of nonWhites are to you, here is a racial dot map based on the 2010 Census:

<http://demographics.coopercenter.org/DotMap/>

It's okay, go ahead and go look. I'll wait. While you're there, you need to map out your withdrawal routes, and secondaries, in case that route is blocked by other refugees. And tertiaries, in case the secondaries have been overrun. How far are you from New America?

Even the mainstream media has finally noticed the internal remigrations taking place in the United States. The cover story for the March 14, 2014 issue of the Christian Science Monitor was an article entitled 'Why African-Americans Are Moving Back To The South', and noted that "By 2010, about 57 percent of the nation's African-Americans were living in the South – a higher percentage than at any time in 50 years." Furthermore, 1.5 million blacks have moved from Chicago, Detroit, and New York to the South in the last two decades alone.

In the February 2nd, 2015 issue of U.S.A. Today, the headline reading "After nearly 100 years, the Great Migration begins reversal" boasted the subtitle "College grads and retirees are leading the return of blacks to the South". Blaring subchapters read 'A major redistribution of a people' and 'A quiet return could reshape region', peppered with nightmarish statistics such as "For African Americans moving from the Northeast, 82% moved to the South."

Not to be outdone, NBC news jumped on the bandwagon in March of 2015 with a story touting "Why Some African-Americans Are Moving Down South". Their conclusion was, basically, to get away from other African-Americans, or at least to get away from the higher taxes and higher crime and lower education and higher poverty that come with African-Americans. Like the old saying says, though, you can run all of your life, and never get away from yourself. So, since they are the problem, they bring the problem with them. According to NBC, which referenced the same census data I used, the results were clear. The complexion of the South was changing.

'In a reversal, more blacks moving back to the South', observed the Washington Times in a February 16th, 2011 Culture column piece, which fawned that "The nation's black population grew by roughly 1.7 million over the past decade. About 75 percent of that growth occurred in the South — primarily metropolitan areas such as Atlanta, Dallas, Houston, Miami and Charlotte, N.C.. That's up from 65 percent in the 1990s, according to the latest census estimates. The gains came primarily at the expense of Northern metropolitan areas such as New York and Chicago, which posted their first declines in black population since at least 1980. Illinois saw its first decline in the black population in the state's history, with the number of blacks decreasing by 1.3 percent since 2000, according to official 2010 census figures released Tuesday.”

The New York Times, CBS News, the Pittsburgh Post Gazette, and dozens of other blogs and websites echoed the same sentiments, all fueled by the census numbers. Mr. Chittum's last update to Civil War Two was prior to the release of this data heralding the Great Reverse Migration, as the pundits are calling it. Had he addressed it, I might not have felt so compelled to. But what might we write after the 2020 statistics are counted? That, still, is largely up to you.

Gregory Kay makes a good case that Whites in the South may be able to stand and fight. The statistics in and of themselves, he states, don't present the entire story, as they don't measure the disorganization of blacks or the military potential of Whites, even outnumbered, once enraged. In the interests of fair play, he has a point that the White settlers who first arrived on this continent found themselves greatly outnumbered by the primitive Indian savages here, and they remained in the minority for four generations in the areas where the two races were in contact. During that time, their superior intellect, creativity, ingenuity, and industry prevailed, and often they dredged up the will to deal with their enemies in such a forthright manner that the term 'genocide' might be an appropriate assessment of the results. If pushed, they might do so again. Of any single group of Whites in North America, I would give Southerners credit for having the most warrior spirit. So, if any people could do it, it might be them. We shall see. As Gregory said when we were discussing that possibility for this book, to quote Carl Von Clausewitz's 'On War', he outlined one of the most basic principles: "the side willing to go the farthest is the one that usually wins." That's a maxim that I've always lived by in politics, as well, so if Southern Whites are able to bring forth a truly Clausewitzian spirit, they may triumph without having to make a strategic withdrawal to regroup, first. Let's give a rebel yell, if they do! Heck, we might even pitch in and help, if they hurry.

Chapter Three

What This Hath Wrought

“To me, balkanization means the splitting of a larger multicultural entity into smaller more culturally or ethnically homogeneous entities. So many people, in America today, seem to feel that their needs are not being met by the government. Not surprising, since the government can't be all things to everyone.” -A concerned citizen

Next, let's look at some of the ways that the re-migration of the different races within our borders has changed the cultural and political status of those areas they move into. Sometimes, of course, liberal Whites who flee diversity make the White areas they flee towards worse, when they are guilt-ridden and desperate to prove that they aren't really racist. That means that, for example, Harrison, Arkansas, a town of 12,000, which is over 90% White, has a 'Task Force On Race Relations', and elected city officials invite the NAACP in from the other (black) end of the state to hold parades and bury caskets labeled 'racism'. The Mayor tried to work with a reality tv film production crew to import enough blacks to bring the numbers of them up to 10%, in order to force diversity on the town. They hold Black History Month celebrations in the Public Library which no black people attend. It's ridiculous. But they do backflips to prove that they moved to the Ozarks from Houston or Chicago or Memphis for the fresh mountain air or the ‘better schools’ or the ‘lower crime’. Their White guilt won’t let them tell the truth. Worse, it compels them to want to make the places they came to, just like the places they come from. That’s why all nine members of the Seattle City Council, and the Mayor there, support tighter gun control measures for the city, too. They fled north from California, but want to establish a liberal utopia in the Pacific Northwest. Portland, where I’ve had the opportunity to speak a couple of times, is a haven for homosexuals. Remember when we talked about why the Northwest Imperative was a non-starter? The overwhelming dominance of very liberal Whites there is the primary reason why...them, and the Chinese army.

White refugees are not always so destructive, though. The whole northern panhandle of Idaho has gone from a Democratic stronghold to completely ‘red’ (i.e., conservative) over the last decade. This is due almost entirely to conservative Whites fleeing California landing there and getting involved in local and statewide politics. When I last visited Coeur D’Alene, before Pastor Butler died, it was much more liberal than it is today, for example. That’s a positive development for Whites. So, some White refugees are better than others. The worst ones will just have to be sidelined and compelled to silence when the Balkanization process begins, and Whites regain control over our political destiny. Just as with northern Idaho, which went from being a solidly Democratic area to a staunchly Republican one, throughout Wyoming, Montana, and the Dakotas the arrival of tens of thousands of radicalized, racialized White conservatives have transformed the lean of the state legislatures from a western libertarian approach to positions more paleo-conservative. This is nowhere more true than in the Kalispell area, where its Pioneer Little Europe is a growing confederation of affiliated Nationalists. So White grows the far West, that in many areas the only minorities are a remnant of former Indian tribes on their vast reservations.

A little further east, a unique situation is developing in the Midwestern states, wherein the liberal, majority nonWhite cities are surrounded by rings of increasingly recalcitrant, and increasingly conservative, White suburbs and ‘bedroom communities’. The former are dependent on the latter, who play the role of absentee landlords. White flight took them out of the urban areas which they still keep nominally running. Should their services be rescinded, however, the infrastructures of the cities would quickly fail. This is especially true of Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Louis, and Kansas City, but also of Topeka, Springfield, and Des Moines. White flight, whether of ten miles or a thousand, changes the productivity and standard of living of both the place it flees from, for the worse, as well as the place it flees to, for the better. It's more than just a brain drain, it's a spiritual vacuum.

Admittedly, Whites moving out of cities like Detroit and Chicago does hurt the economic infrastructure of those towns, but frankly, who cares? Illegal immigration hurts all Americans, but disproportionately those Whites who make up the majority of the taxpaying citizens. According to a report from the Center for Immigration Studies, for every two immigrants admitted to the United States between 2000 and 2014 only one job was added – a 2:1 ratio - See more at: <http://www.teaparty.org/brooks-gutierrez-trying-rationally-segregate-americans-108257/#sthash.12jsUaE8.dpuf>. You will note that the article cited continually uses our Word For The Day, 'Balkanization'. "Beyond illegal immigration, each year the U.S. adds 1 million new permanent immigrants on green cards, joined by nearly 1 million foreign workers, dependents and refugees, and about half a million new foreigners sought by university admissions boards. As a result of these high immigration quotas, one-fourth of the United States population are now either immigrants or have immigrant parents." Yes, more and more people in the mainstream are learning the word, and beginning to use it, and more importantly, are spreading the idea...which increases the likelihood that Balkanization will become a self-fulfilling prophecy. Talking about the coming breakup of America makes it more likely, and gives the idea life of its own.

Even in middle America, immigrants account for three-fifths of Nashville's new population growth over the last decade, primarily because of purposeful Federal government programs to relocate nonWhite refugees there, just as the German government responded to Nationalists from PEGIDA protesting Muslim immigration by rerouting thousands of African 'refugees' to Dresden.

Remember the Muslim Kuwaiti who shot the four unarmed Marines dead in Chatanooga? Some may recall that in the beginning, the first Iraq war was justified because of Saddam Hussein's attempted reconquest of the breakaway kingdom of Kuwait. (ahem, Balkanization) Russia, as stated previously, Balkanized a quarter century ago. They just got the Crimean back from the Ukraine. That, in and of itself, was an example of an ethnic conflict which spread into a war between nations, as Russia stepped in to aid the Russian ethnic population in that historically ethnic Russian peninsula. We watched it all unfold on t.v.. This isn't ancient history. It was literally last year. The Russians still control some other non-Russian political regions, like Kaliningrad, Kurils, and Sakhalin. They are, to a lesser degree than the Crimea, potential flashpoints for conflict, just as all multi-ethnic areas are, here or there. Russia could clash with Poland or even Germany over Kaliningrad, or with Japan over Sakhalin Island. But think for a minute of how little differences there are, ethnically and culturally, between the Russians and Ukrainians, compared to the White Protestant redneck good-old boys in Nashville, the home of country music, and the East Africans, Arabs, and Southeast Asians who have flooded into the city in such numbers that it has become known as 'Little Kurdistan'. The diversity, and therefore the potential for conflict, is much greater there than between the Slavic cousins and neighbors. And the Federal government is promoting it. Pushing it. Making it inevitable. They are sowing the wind, and will reap a whirlwind.

When nonWhite refugees or immigrants move (or are moved) into an area, by contrast, that area goes blue, meaning Democratic, the party of the minority coalition. That coalition of nonWhite groups, combined with homosexuals and self-loathing, anti-White White liberals (predominantly women) are now the electoral majority in America. Let me repeat that. We all know that demographic projections indicate that in one generation Whites will be a numerical minority in the United States. We already are a cultural minority. We already are a political minority. We already are a minority numerically among those under the age of fifteen...who will be eligible to vote in just three years. Do the math. Until the Balkanization happens, the trend is not going to slow down. With every passing year, Whites will become a smaller and smaller percentage of the U.S. population. Therefore, the longer it takes to happen, the fewer Whites will be left, and the smaller amount of territory we will retain for our New America. That's why I propose that multiracial democracy can't fly, that what cannot fly, should fall, and what is falling, we should still push, and say, 'fall faster'. Like Thomas Paine said, if war must come, let it come in our time, so that our children may live in peace. And it must. So, bring it. Hasten The Day.

Now, what did I just say, above? The changing demographic situation in the U.S. means that the coalition of nonWhite minorities, combined with nominally White anti-White liberals, will always, from this point forward, outvote White interests. As liberals have correctly noted, and celebrated, we have passed the tipping point where any White Nationalist political party can win back control of the United States of America. What the anti-Whites have accurately marked, some conservatives seem to have willfully ignored. Why? Because once they admit that Whites, even euphemistically referred to as ‘conservatives’, or et cetera, can never regain control of the country through the ballot box, and facing the looming precipice of the huge baby boomer generation of Whites (i.e, the Tea Party) beginning to die off, speeding up the browning of the electorate even more, what are their options? Surrender? Expatriation? Or, admitting that the electoral process no longer offers any solution to America’s, meaning White people’s, problems, or an avenue to petition for a redress of our grievances? Secession or revolution? That’s too scary a concept for them to think of, or consider, yet. Yet.

I try to remind myself that we shouldn’t be angry at Whites who are unwilling to identify the assault on the Confederate flag as a racial struggle. Yes, they are gutless cowards. But so were the vast majority of Americans who, as late as 1770, vehemently opposed any revolution against their King. Many of those Tory loyalists who didn’t move North and become the more docile, authoritarian-loving cultural progenitors of Canada eventually flipped the script and joined the winning team, being followers, as most people are, and only wanting to be in the consensus and hold the majority viewpoint, as women of both genders invariably do. Likewise, many of those who now wave the star-spangled banner, may someday come to realize that our race is our nation...or they might just shut up and get out of our way. That would be good enough, as even in the first American revolution, a majority never supported the revolution, until it was a fait accompli.

Even as the power brokers in Washington and Tel Aviv work on a plan to divide Syria and Iraq up along ethnic, tribal, and religious lines into a few different countries (Kurdish, Sunni, and Shiite), they are just getting comfortable referring to that plan as, you guessed it, Balkanization. If it’s a good idea for the Kurds, Shiites, Sunnis, and everybody else in Syria and Iraq, it’s a good idea for working out the differences between Los Angeles and Boise, too. As social cohesion weakens, the fabric of society is strained and group polarization increases. The internet contributes to the Balkanization and radicalization process because people seek out forums, communities, views, and social media sources which agree with their own worldviews, and reinforce and strengthen their preconceived notions. Then, they are further radicalized and drawn into more extreme versions of their own views. Why? Because people like to hear views which support their own, but just a half step or more radically expressed, as a thrill, a shock, and an inspiration. That is how people have come to define leadership: someone who says what they themselves are thinking a bit more forthrightly than they would be willing to express ‘out loud’. That validates their own ever-radicalizing views as being, heck, downright moderate, by comparison. Cautiously so. This is a reinforcement of their desire to be safely in the mainstream and majority worldview, because they aren’t expressing the most radical version of their weltanschauung. Folks like I am. Folks like you are. If you’ve read my book ‘The Ice Path’, then you know that’s how you become a leader. It’s not demagoguery, if it’s for real. Feel it, don’t fake it. Because in the end, what you pretend to be, is exactly what you will become. That, in effect, will result in your own self-radicalization.

There are many areas of the world where Balkanization is taking place right now, which you’ve never heard of. If you lived there, the process would be your top priority, though, guaranteed. There’s the TransCarpathian region of western Ukraine, where Russians, Hungarians, and Ruthenians contend. As in Azerbaijan, Armenia, Abkhazia, Chechnya, South Ossetia, and Moldova, the discontent minority populations make up a much smaller percentage than blacks or Hispanics do in the U.S., and have much lesser cultural differences. Still, they’re fighting for their independence, already.

Colorado, Maryland, and California face partition challenges from those wishing to form new states from their parts, through democratic referendums. Likewise, Catalonia and Scotland, again, may soon vote for independence from Spain and the United Kingdom, respectively. Texas, Barotseland in Zambia, and the northern two-thirds of Mali called Azawad are a bit less polite about it. The governor of Texas called out the Texas National Guard to monitor U.S. military operations within his state during the ‘Jade Helm’ exercise, due to the pressure put on him by anti-Federal Texan citizens, many of whom want their state to become a Republic, once again. Puntland and Jubaland in Somalia are just shooting their way free. So, here is my personal list of areas to watch for Balkanization, while we are hurdling headlong in that direction, ourselves.

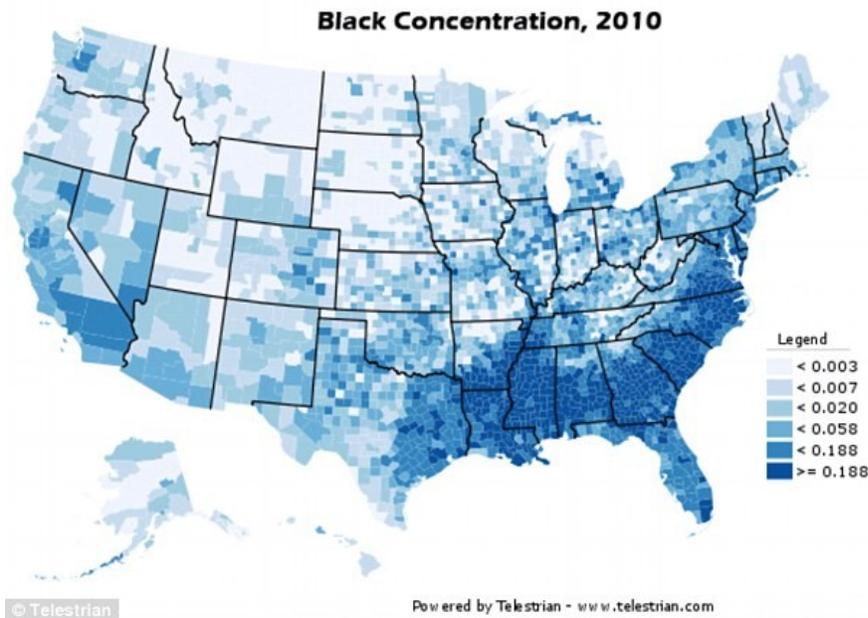

Cyrenaica wants to break away from eastern Libya and control most of the oil in the North African country, post-Khaddafi. Their capitol, which you may have heard of, would be a little place called Benghazi. East Turkistan, that area of China which they call Xinjiang, seeks independence as a Muslim state, one which was the setting for much of the action in ‘Wasting The Dawn: Hasten The Day III’. A near majority of ethnic Russians in the eastern Ukraine want to realign with Moscow. Domestically, the border counties of Northern California and Southern Oregon want to establish a new libertarian-minded state of 'Jefferson', which joined all fifty states in petitioning the Federal government for secession following Obama's reelection. The islands of French Polynesia are trying to shake off colonial rule from Paris. Transnational Muslims want to form a TransCaucasus Emirate out of the fragmented areas between the Caspian and Black Seas. Kurdistan WILL emerge out of parts of one or more of Iraq, Syria, Iran, Turkey, and Syria where the thirty million stateless Kurds live. 'Al Sham' would inherit the remainder of Iraq and Syria as a Muslim caliphate. Catalonia, the aforementioned region of southern Spain bordering France described as sovereign in 'Waiting For The Sun: Hasten The Day II', may well vote themselves free. As may Scotland. With each of these struggles or referendums, the use of the term 'Balkanization' will spread, as will the idea. White Americans will be moving out of the Southeastern states and the Southwestern states to the West and Midwest. Blacks will continue to move to the South. Hispanics will continue to flood into the border regions, and spread outwards from there. And the alienation of the Heartland of America from the coasts will continue, our differences widening. Widening, stretching, then finally ripping, cracking, and tearing apart, like the seams of a rotten patchwork quilt. Noone will be holding a referendum on it, though. The borders of the new nations arising phoenix-like from the ashes of the United States will be decided by the cartridge box, not the ballot box.

An interesting question to ponder, from an immigration and sociological perspective, is this: are those who are the first to immigrate out of an area, for whatever reason, the most courageous and adventuresome, or the most unsuccessful and desperate? Ask your ancestors. They left and came here, with several stops along the way, for you to get where you are. And you have far better reasons to move than they had. Trust me.

Chapter Four

A Death By Inches

“Balkanization is the recognition of the need for tribe and identity separate from the herd.” –Brett Stevens, Amerika.org.

I believe that people - most especially Whites - are realizing that division is happening right before their eyes in the United States. We have to realize that the United States has always been on the edge of Balkanization, from its very beginning. Just the name of our country, the ‘United States of America’, conjures up all of the different states and territories standing as one republic in various degrees of stability. India, similarly, has only existed as one nation for seventy years, cobbled together by the British, and now left swaying in the wind as one of the world’s most populous and nuclear armed coalition of mutually hostile minorities...just like us. But unlike the clear distinctions there between Hindus, Muslims, and Sikhs, here, like black writer Thomas Sowell recently penned, once a racial war starts, it will be hard to stop.

Back to the recent Yugoslavian example, ethnic conflict in the United States may well begin peacefully, and the Federal military itself Balkanize, as the Yugoslavian Army did. In Judith Armatta's 'The Twilight of Impunity, the War Crimes Trials of Slobodan Milosevic', the author observed that "The wars mostly resulted in peace accords, involving full international recognition of new states, but with massive economic damage to the region. Initially the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) sought to preserve the unity of the whole of Yugoslavia by crushing the secessionist governments; however the JNA increasingly came under the influence of the Serbian government of Slobodan Milošević that evoked Serbian nationalist rhetoric and was willing to support the Yugoslav state insofar as using it to preserve the unity of Serbs in one state; as a result the JNA began to lose Slovenes, Croats, Kosovar Albanians, Bosniaks, and ethnic Macedonians, and effectively became a Serb army." It's not hard to imagine the U.S. military, once it locked down many military units in their bases and barracks until their loyalty could be verified and they could be sorted out ethnically and regionally, coming out openly for one side or the other. The attempt to make sure that only White units were used to pacify black and Hispanic regions, or only black units to pacify White or Hispanic areas, et cetera, could end up fanning the flames of ethnic conflict into anti-government rebellion...until those separated out units come to cross purposes, and began to fight one another. Remember that the Chattanooga and Little Rock and Fort Hood shooters were successful because the government doesn't even trust military servicemen to be armed on their own bases. The more diverse a military unit is, the less trustworthy it will be when Civil War Two begins, as is true of the rest of our society.

Noone knows whether the pattern for balkanization described by myself or Thomas Chittum will be followed precisely, or how it might play out thereafter, but we can guess. We can also learn from history.

Few of us may be old enough to remember the Cuban boatlift, when Castro emptied out his prisons and sent the criminals to Florida. Think of the movie 'Scarface'. There you go. Florida has a million Tony Montanas. Now we have reopened diplomatic relations with the impoverished Communist nation, and have an official embassy there. They also have one here. So, the Confederate flag is not welcome in the U.S., but the Communist Cuban flag is. Wonderful. But think about the next inevitable step...this will lead to a relaxation of the patrols off the Keys, and Coast Guard security. More drugs will come in. Certainly, more Cuban immigration into Florida, both legally and illegally, will happen, now. As far as Civil War Two and the Balkanization process goes, what this means is that the White enclave in the panhandle and the Black majority in most of the cities of Florida might find themselves in a three sided conflict, and outgunned. Florida might go to Cuba, instead of to New Africa. While the rest of us wait and see, I'm advising my White family members in the sunshine state to immediately start home-schooling their children, as I advise all parents in racially diverse areas, to protect them both physically and psychologically while you are selling your property and moving to New America. Remember what happens to the frog who waits too long to jump, because he feels that the water isn't really all that hot. Hop.

Balkanization is not always solely a racial issue. I know, I know, that's a strange thing for a biological determinist to write, right? But it's true. There are more subtle nuances dividing our nation, slowly but surely. For example, religion. In Minnesota and Michigan, the black Muslim immigrants from places like Somalia hate the native blacks, and the feeling is reciprocated. They fight and kill each other, all the time, for territory, businesses, and neighborhoods. Non-black Muslims of Arab, Iranian, or other mixed and Middle Eastern ancestry fight with local blacks in areas where they have enough numbers to do more than run motel chains and convenience stores. They'd fight the Whites, too, if the Whites bothered to put up a fight. Normally, most of them don't. That would be racist. So both Whites and African-Americans, as well as Asians and Hispanics, are being displaced in places like Dearborn and St. Paul, by Muslims. Frankly, they all see the Muslims as being ruthless and crazy and not to be messed with, and are afraid of them. There are huge swaths of Oslo and Paris and other European cities where non-Muslims simply cannot go, now. Some U.S. communities are not far behind, and already exercise Shariah law. Many Muslims in America are Shiites, who believe that their rulers have to be directly descended from the child-rapist Muhammed. Others are Sunni, and believe their absolute dictators can be elected, sort of. Those two groups have been killing each other for centuries, which is why the Iranians used to fight the Iraqis, and now fight ISIS. Taking into account the home-grown and internet radicalized Muslims, as well as those blacks converted to the faith in prison, and then the Nation of Islam and similar Muslim black groups, and they are a force with which to be reckoned. They will be reckoned with, too, by someone, somewhere, but not by the current U.S. government, which is too afraid of hurting the sensitive feelings of Muslims to even call the terrorists 'terrorists', or to admit that they are motivated by radical Islam. Only after it falls, can they be dealt with in the only manner which they truly understand, and which they will not find ambiguous. In that regard, whether they are White converts to Islam, or polka dotted and zebra striped, lump them together with the other enemies of America's founding people and principles.

In addition to the Muslim growth in the upper Midwest and elsewhere, Jews also hold onto their own racial and religious neighborhoods in sections of New York, New Jersey, Boston, Los Angeles, and several other cities. I guess being the only people on God's green Earth allowed to have their very own country just isn't enough. Many of these are Orthodox communities with their own versions of Shariah law, but others are secular and simply ethnically oriented. Imagine if White people tried that? The Obama administration's Housing authority passed down an order in July of 2015 stating that a nonWhite didn't have to prove that they were personally discriminated against by a homeowner or landlord in a housing purchase or rental, to win a lawsuit for racial discrimination. All they have to show now is that the minority percentage of a particular neighborhood is less than that of another nearby neighborhood, and all city and town governments have to submit plans to the Federal government outlining how they are going to diversify their communities. Don't hold your breath waiting for black or Jewish or Hispanic neighborhoods to submit diversification plans, though. For one thing, not many Whites want to move there! For another, they have a special protected status. Like people who keep venomous reptiles as pets, the liberal politicians had better be very careful how they handle them, though. It could come back to bite them in the assumption that voting will always matter.

Hispanics are overwhelmingly Catholic, though some Evangelical churches have fallen all over themselves trying to fill their pews with the new brown parishioners. Spanish language tv religious broadcasts and dual language church services, help with obtaining documentation and 'social services' regardless of their legal status, and even pictures depicting Jesus as a Mestizo, all await the new invaders. Whatever it takes to put some pesos into the offering plates. Despite some downhome inroads, in general most Latrinos remain Catholic, especially in communities where their populations are dense enough to have their own churches, and priests, and hold traditional mass. Instead of turning the Hispanics into Protestants, the Protestants, especially in the south, have become more pro-diversity and welcoming of legal and illegal immigrants...or they have drifted away from the church, if their traditional racial beliefs remained strong enough to sustain them. Meanwhile the old Italian and Irish centers of American Catholicism have surrendered their own formerly tightly held ethnic loyalties in exchange for something more left-wing than liberation theology, a multiracial apologist cult of trendy Catholicism which is absolutely ‘universal’. Those who disagree, like Mel Gibson and other conservatives, form their own associations with the Creator on their own terms. Most of organized Catholicism, today, now supports multiracialism and diversity, too.

A few White Nationalists have been attracted to Orthodox Christianity, a faith foreign in more ways than one to many Americans outside of a dozen widely-spread Eastern European ethnic communities, primarily on the East Coast. That is because, up until recently in Eastern Europe, there were few nonWhites except Jews for the Orthodox church to concern itself with, and its record with them was formidable. Simply because, the issue never came up. Now, of course, Eastern Orthodoxy is becoming more inclusive and welcoming to any featherless biped which accepts its faith and bothers to show up. If you don’t believe it, just ask them.

Even more than race, perhaps, even within races, certainly, religion has always been a great divider. Jesus himself said to not believe that he had come to unite the earth, but to divide it, and that he had not come to bring peace, but a sword. That’s some real talk, there.

I was raised as a Southern Baptist. Within the Southern Baptist Convention, widely regarded as the most conservative of the Protestant denominations, reside the First and Second Baptist churches, as well as the traditionally segregated black congregations and the White congregations. Within the small town in which I grew up, like most of its kind, there were more churches than any other kind of business. Most similar to our own were the Missionary Baptists and the Freewill Baptists. The Assembly of God believed in a less reserved and stoic celebration of faith, including speaking in tongues and faith healing and the laying on of hands. They also believed that one could backslide and be in need of salvation again, much like Catholics, but without the confessional. Our denomination believed that once you were saved, you were always saved. Then there were the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Church of God, the Church of Christ, the Pentecostals whose women wore long denim skirts, and the scattering of Mennonites. Larger towns had Episcopalians, Lutherans...it’s dizzying for me, and I grew up in it. Some of the doctrinal differences were insignificant, but for some, the devil was in the details. Not a few believed that all of the sinners except their very own congregation were going to Hell on a shingle, and they might not be too sure about the last few pews. Add to that environment the hysteria caused by the grid going down and the kids being hungry, and one can imagine how even minor religious differences might affect even otherwise homogenous White areas following The Balk.

Ideally, in a survival situation where things are desperate, just staying alive might trump racialism, and racialism might trump religious differences, but based on human history, that's not the safe way to bet. There really are two large Protestant Christian denominations who are somewhat prepared for balkanization. They are the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and Christian Identity adherents. There are over six million Mormons in the U.S. who are a part of their official church, and another quarter million who belong to one of several Fundamentalist Latter Day Saints sects which believe in, if not practice, polygamy. Their collective sphere of influence stretches from Arizona to Idaho, centered on Utah, of course. The LDS and the FLDS are organized preppers, encouraging not only communities and churches but individual households to stock up on canned and nonperishable food and other essential supplies, even operating large canneries for that purpose. Deep in the collective Mormon psyche are prophecies that the U.S. government will collapse and their theocracy, called Deseret, will rise as a powerful independent nation. Their founder, Joseph Smith, called the idea 'The White Horse Prophecy'. Those who have read my 'Hasten The Day' trilogy, once again, will recognize this scenario as unfolding during The Balk. Their organizational skills from the grassroots and community level up the state and regional plane position them well to consolidate and retain power following a collapse and absence of Federal authority.

Up until a generation ago, the LDS was openly racial, denying that nonWhites even had souls, until the NCAA threatened to stop broadcasting sporting events at B.Y.U. unless they changed that policy publicly. They have since imported a fair number of Pacific Islander converts to Mormonism, and Utah, from their mission work there over the last two decades. Many of the F.L.D.S., however, are unreformed and unapologetic on that issue, just as they are on polygamy. Interestingly, the recent Supreme Court ruling legalizing gay marriage opens the door to legalizing polygamous marriage next, if matrimony is no longer defined as the legal union of one man and one woman. Such a court case would both marginalize the L.D.S. somewhat from mainstream society as being 'fringe' again, as well as strengthen and reunite it internally, which would be a profitable trade-off for them. Some Protestant Christians already consider Mormonism to be a cult, and the L.D.S. to not even be a Christian denomination, per se. From what I have seen of Mormons I know, they will be better off than most of the rest of us, when the day comes.

Christian Identity is a much smaller denomination, with perhaps 25,000 official adherents throughout the United States, and perhaps twice again that number who share most of the beliefs of Christian Identity. Many of them live in the Ozarks or Appalachians, or in other predominantly White, rural areas. Although it is divided into more and less radical sects referred to as 'single seedline' and 'dual seedline', all Christian Identity doctrines share the basic views that Whites are the Israelites of the Bible, and therefore are God's chosen people. They are, then, definitively racist. With few actual churches or congregations, most worship in family units or with other family units, and practice their faith in chosen withdrawal from mainstream Judeo-Christianity. One could, indeed, write a book simply about different Christian Identity doctrines, and indeed, others have.

But within the current borders of the currently United States are also many other religions. There are Hindus, largely from India, following what some of them don't even realize was originally a racial religion developed by the Aryans who conquered northern India and brought civilization to it 6,000 years ago. The caste system of 'varnas', which comes from the same root word as our 'varnish', meaning color, were supposed to keep the Aryan's descendants from interbreeding with the native Dravidians. It worked, pretty much, for a long time. Then there are Sikhs, whose turbans often get them confused with Muslims, and Buddhists and Shintoists and Odinists and Wiccans and Druids, and everything else that ever was, it seems like. When the lid comes off, some people will shed their religion and their philosophy like a sweater during the summer, and focus on survival. Others will cling to their faiths more tightly than ever. Remember the witchcraft trials? Imagine how some will behave towards non-believers if they think they're acting out a chapter of Revelations in real time? The apocalyptic cleansing could sweep away as many as ethnic and racial differences, once it gets started.

While it is true that more people have been killed in places like Cambodia, the Soviet Union, and China by those trying to enforce an absence of religion, those squabbling over whose version of belief is best ranks a close second in terms of bloodletting, historically. The Crusades. The Thirty Year's War. England vs. Spain. The I.R.A.. You get the picture. Right now, religious division means some people wanting to protest or otherwise stop abortions, while others support a woman's 'right to choose'. Some support traditional marriage, while others applaud the legalization of gay marriage. But when The Balk comes, faith will take on a higher degree of importance, and there won't be a civil authority around to curb mob rule. People tend to revert back to their most deeply held, primitive, basic group identities when the thin threads of civilization that bind them to others more removed from them break. Their families. People who look and sound like them. People who think and believe what they do, or who can fake it reasonably well, pragmatically. Those who are different will be turned on by the mob. Like any other differentiation, you're going to be better off living around people who are more homogeneous, and in a way that's similar to you, when things fall apart. As a matter of fact, becoming a part of a community means being involved politically and socially and culturally with it, and building connections and relationships with others within it for mutually advantageous future support. It's all about networking, from a community watch on steroids to a bartering system to group public works projects for the collective good. Join a local civic organization. Be active in your community. In many White areas of New America, that means either going to a local church, or at least being on friendly terms with some who do. Being the only Odinist or Wiccan in a Christian community when the lights go out will be just about as good for you and your families' long term survival chances as being an HIV positive Somalian. Maybe worse, if the Somalian can sing 'Kumbaya' in English.

“Balkanization is the further segregation of like people into their own states.” – Overall2

Now, let’s think once again about where you live. How far is it to the nearest home inhabited by a nonWhite? How far is it to the nearest place where a group of more than one hundred of them could be gathered? How far are you from the nearest highway or interstate that is less than one tank of gas away from the nearest concentration of nonWhites?

How well do you know your neighbors? Do they share your patriotic views? What skills, supplies, or resources do they have at their disposal? Would they work together at something more assertive than a community watch program, if the situation required it? Have you discussed such a potential scenario with them?

How far is it to the nearest grocery store? Gas station? Food distribution center warehouse? Propane storage yard? Water storage tank? Military base?

Take a look inside your pantry and cupboard. How much food do you have on hand? Enough to feed your household for a month? A week? Do you cook with electricity or gas? What will you do without them? What about electric power, do you have solar backup or a gasoline or diesel generator? How about candles and lamps and kerosene for them?

How much water do you have stored? Are you on a well, a cistern, or municipal water? Where is the nearest source of fresh water? Do you know how to purify it for drinking?

What firearms do you have on hand? How much ammunition for each? How many people in your family are proficient in their use, in an emergency?

Do you have extra gasoline and oil and basic repair tools on hand for your automobile?

Have you considered putting together a bugout bag of emergency necessities that could be grabbed while you were heading out the door if you had to evacuate quickly? What would you need to put in one? Food, water, a change of sturdy clothes and hiking boots, a backup weapon?

Do you have extra medications, especially for life-preserving prescriptions, on hand? Think about everything you use in your life every day, and what you would do without them, or to replace them.

Has your family talked about or rehearsed what to do if an emergency happens and they are at school, or if they are at home and you are at work or elsewhere? Do they know where to meet you, or whether to stay put and wait for you? Do you all know a simple, easy to remember code word to indicate when it is time to enact an action plan based on previous practice?

Using a map, draw a radius out fifty miles from the nearest concentration of nonWhite population, in red. Are you inside it? Locate all of the safe rendezvous points which your family could meet up at within a ten mile radius of your home, at mark them. Then choose several safe havens. They could be the homes of relatives or close friends in more rural, homogeneous areas who would accept you and your family, if you had to evacuate your home. Mark them. Then, memorize the routes to each of them from your home, and prioritize them, with the nearest being the first priority. Involve all of your family in your plan. Make sure that you don't choose routes that enter into other red zones. What is plan one? What is plan two?

Think about whether you prefer to lie low, or take a stand. If you stay in place, will you get a generator and enjoy electricity, or will you not, since the noise of the generator and the obvious light and noise of the electricity might make you a target for other, less fortunate souls? If you go on the road to evacuate, will you go during the day when you can see better, or at night when fewer people might be out, but those who are can see you better than you can see them?

Plan. Prepare, Rehearse. Drill. Practice. But most of all, resolve that when the time comes you will ruthlessly protect what is yours, without hesitation.

First of all, if you have kids, even if your school district is pristinely White, I'd advise you to pull them out and home school them. I know that's hard for some to do, when there's only one parent or both parents work and there's no babysitter, but I really recommend it, if at all possible.

If it's not possible, please ask your kids every day what they are learning in school, what they are discussing, not just in social studies classes, but others, as well. Ask pointed questions. Develop a dialogue with your kids, so they know what you believe, and what you don't. That way they know what you would approve of them being taught, and what you wouldn't. Don't be afraid to call out the teachers on their BS, either. Teachers fear the administration, administrators fear the school board, and the board fears the voters. They all fear negative publicity. Use that.

How sure am I that you may need all this? More certain than most of the colonists would have been if you'd asked them whether they should be an independent nation or not in, say, 1770.

Imagine telling an East Berliner in 1985 that the wall was going to come down dividing their city without a shot being fired in just a few years?

History is full of inevitabilities which only seemed so in hindsight. But I can tell you one thing...multiracialism is inherently unstable, compared to homogeneous societies. And multiracial democracy, even more so, it just cannot fly. What cannot fly, must fall, and what is falling, we should still push, and say, fall faster, because I tell you this, the only alternative to Balkanization is White minority status and eventual extinction through amalgamation. So, unless you want mulatto great grandchildren, you'd better pray that I'm right. The only uncertainty remaining is whether it will happen soon enough for it to be Whites vs. Blacks vs. Hispanics, et cetera, or whether it will just be the Mexicans and Chinese fighting it out to see who will inherit America. I'm an optimist about it, though, I believe that it will happen within our lifetimes, and furthermore, within the next decade. I am hopeful about it. Hopeful that it will happen, that is, considering the alternative, which is extinction. Every Confederate flag attack, every black riot, and every anti-White action by the federal government further divides the nation and pushes us closer to it.

I think that we will lose half the continent, and half of our current White population in North America, before we have a White nation, mostly due to starvation and disease, and secondarily due to direct enemy action. But I believe that without the U.S.'s interference and pushing diversity on them, many if not all European nations will be able to sort things out there with a lot less loss of life. And those who will die first, here and there, will be the liberals who socialize and live among the nonWhites, so the death rate for liberals will be higher than for racials, from the gate. It's true that racism is a disease that is spread through contact with nonWhites, for many. But on the other hand, few liberals live in the rural White areas, either. They live in nice gated communities which the nonWhite hordes will consider easy pickings once the lights go out for a week or so.

Sometimes people have to be pushed to the breaking point before they will fight back. They have to feel threatened. It's easy for them to feel insulated and safe and comfortable. The lights are still on, there's still beer in the fridge, and a game on tv. But the times, they are a'changing. When their backs are to the wall, our enemies tie sharp rocks to the end of sticks. When our backs are to the wall, we split atoms. I've been involved in the White Nationalist movement for over a quarter century, and I have NEVER seen a time when racial differences were as hot and the potential for breakup as likely as they are right now. That's why the ballot box is no longer an avenue to liberty for our people. NonWhites in the U.S. fifteen years of age are already the majority. No pro-White administration will ever be elected again, not under this government. That's why we need a New America.

Depending on the circumstance of The Balk, you might have to revise and adapt your bugout or hunker down plans to suit changing threats or opportunities. One rendezvous point or safe haven might be unreachable, or no longer safe. Transportation or communication might break down. Illness or injury could intervene. The roads might be blocked with stalled or wrecked cars, or roadblocks by law enforcement or brigands or both. Martial law might be declared, curtailing all travel. But since other people in your circle of trust will learn your plan and be acting accordingly, you should try to stick to it as closely as possible. When you adapt and improvise, change or throw away only the parts of the plan which have been compromised, retaining the rest. Don't just make things up as you go along. That's what undisciplined lower primates do.

How many White Nationalists or preppers or patriots or three percenters do you know personally? Being facebook friends doesn't count. Those more than a hundred miles away from you don't count. How many of them are involved in your Balkanization plan? How many have you trained with, 'in real life'? How many would you trust to share a bunker, or a foxhole, with? For those whom you DO trust, do you have a telephone tree established, or an alternate means of communication and rendezvous set up?

How many of your friends do you trust? I mean, really trust, as in, trust with your family's lives? Do they have addictions or habits? Are they reckless or hot-tempered? Think about who you want to be in your innermost circle of trust very carefully. When civil order collapses, the only thing holding people in check will be their own sense of honor, or superior strength and firepower. Keep that in mind when associating with anyone now, and you won't have to keep an eye on them, then.

Many survivalists spent their retirement funds buying gas masks and fallout shelters and canned food in the 1980's, in anticipation of a nuclear war with the Soviet Union, or a 'Red Dawn' type invasion scenario. By now, all of their firearms and ammunition and other cached material are just so much rust and mildew. So, it's important to consider the timeframe of when the Balkanization may happen. I'm not an alarmist, or a paranoid "The End Is Near!" doomsayer. But in many ways, the breakup of America has already begun.

Every day in the news we read articles that are increasingly polarized to the left or the right, and people choose to read views which agree with their own, as previously mentioned, and read opposing views only to reinforce their own and point out to others how stupid and wrong and evil the other side is. We ALL do this. But never before have supposedly mainstream news sources been so politicized. Headline stories are at best editorials, and more often, polemics. We only express our political thoughts with those who reinforce them. And every day, there is something new to enrage and outrage and desensitize us. Another dozen black on White crimes. Another couple or three asinine anti-White statements by liberal celebrities. Another black racial protest. Another hundred thousand illegal Mestizos pouring in. Our frustration builds up. And up. And up.

Don't worry, the other side is also feeling more alienated and removed from the mainstream of public discourse, too. To them, the government is racist, and their enemy, as well. Even as it is dominated by nonWhites or those who forward nonWhite interests, and even as it bends over backwards to placate them, it is never enough to prove that it isn't out to get them, is it? Both ends feel increasingly at odds with the middle. The gulf between the races, exacerbated by every police shooting or viral video, widens every day. No one knows when the societal contractions will finally succeed in pushing out this baby, but it's crowning soon. Everyone feels it. It's in the air so much that non-political people are openly talking about it. Rebellion. Civil War. Secession. And now, we're teaching them a new word. Balkanization.

What the readers of this book need to be aware of, however, is that change does not happen overnight. A tree chopped in half may fall slowly or quickly, at its own speed, with vagaries such as the wind and surrounding trees and the air temperature influencing the rate of descent. Likewise, societies do not usually collapse overnight. Rome wasn't built in a day, and neither was the collapse of its empire something that happened in a day, either.

Sheer inertia will keep things going for a bit. Centripetal force will keep things from falling, for a time. Remember the line in the Declaration of Independence: “all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed.” White people are the most patriotic, the most likely to serve in the armed forces, and the slowest to wrath, of all of the American peoples. We get it honest, from our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. ‘The Wrath Of The Awakened Saxon’ by Rudyard Kipling is emblematic of that:

“It was not part of their blood,
It came to them very late,
With long arrears to make good,
When the Saxon began to hate.

They were not easily moved,
They were icy -- willing to wait
Till every count should be proved,
Ere the Saxon began to hate.

Their voices were even and low.
Their eyes were level and straight.
There was neither sign nor show
When the Saxon began to hate.

It was not preached to the crowd.
It was not taught by the state.
No man spoke it aloud
When the Saxon began to hate.

It was not suddenly bred.
It will not swiftly abate.
Through the chilled years ahead,
When Time shall count from the date
That the Saxon began to hate.”

White people are also the most disciplined and law and order loving of the American peoples, and this tendency won't just evaporate into thin air once it becomes obvious to everyone that The Balk has begun in earnest. In many rural White areas, at first the breakup of America will just be something they see happening on tv or the internet. Unless they have friends or relatives in the cities where black riots spread to, or where Mexicans are raising their flag and kicking out the Gringos, it won't affect them personally. Not unless it's triggered by an economic collapse or an E.M.P. attack or some other form of direct or indirect warfare. As long as the grid stays up, they will maintain a benign apathy towards the situation. Many will even deny that it's a racial civil war beginning, or will assume that the government will soon have things under control and the civil unrest quelled, just like it always has so many times before. "This too will pass", they will say. "Things will blow over, like they always do". Some will be praying for peace and healing and reconciliation. They will become angry at anyone whom they perceive as 'racist'. They will go so far as to say that the government or a shadowy conspiracy is working to create division between the races so that the citizenry won't be united against it. That those taking up arms are playing right into the government's (corporation's, bosses', et cetera) hands. This is a natural stage of denial, a part of every grieving process when a person or a nation dies. They'll have to work their way through it. You can hold their hand and help them along.

Others, more savvy, will be praying for war. They'll be doing their last minute defensive preparations and stockpiling supplies, or flat-out heading for the hills or the front lines, depending on their spirit. The first direct impingement on life for many Whites who live outside of major cities will be economic in nature. Long before the electricity goes off and the water stops flowing from their faucets, the stock market will take a nosedive and many banks will begin to fail. Millions of people will lose their savings and their investments, and then they will call upon the government to do something to end the anarchy. But of course, at that point, it will already be too late. That's when the first wave of panic will set in. Runs on banks, and the cleaning out of grocery store shelves and hardware stores and every other kind of store, will commence, as inflation makes whatever money people have physical access to worth less and less every day. It'll be like any forecast ice storm, and grow from there. Foodstuffs and durable goods will be snatched up first, and barter systems may develop in some instances. Foreign investors will sell off any stock or bond based in the U.S.. Foreign banks will drop the dollar like it's hot. Foreign governments, including perhaps China, will call in the billions of dollars of debt we owe to them. They may well seize U.S. owned assets on foreign soil as partial compensation for their losses. That is not, though, the end of civilization.

EthnoState

Even after interstate commerce is shut down by riots and shortages and delivery failures, and there's nothing left to buy in stores, most predominantly White areas will retain a certain degree of law and order. Those with nearby military bases which have predominantly White units on base will be the safest. Those units, for those soldiers who don't simply desert and go home to protect their families, or go on the road as brigands or warlords, or rush to join the fight in the nearest city, may end up running things, locally. Those communities with nearby military bases containing racially diverse units will be the least safe. In fact, they may fall victim to the predations of them. Absent that threat, local law enforcement, being in most cases directly tied to the community, can be expected to do their best to keep their jurisdictions peaceful. Think of the first Mad Max movie. Local and County and State police will in many cases either continue to do their jobs, or in some instances regroup to protect their own families and local communities; but so long as their supplies of gasoline hold out, they will keep protecting and serving. Perhaps as volunteers, or perhaps as local warlords. At some point, they might be picked off one by one, or overwhelmed by mobs. Until then, though, some White areas will keep chugging along as best they can with rationing, collectivization, sharing, and the deputization of local militias. Yes, that means any able bodied citizen willing to carry a gun and use it, whom the de facto warlords trust. It will be a neo-feudal time.

A real turning point will come when the local power grid goes down, and can't be recovered. Psychologically, that will be the breaking juncture for many, when they realize that this is not a temporary crisis. Another will be when the t.v. stations either go off the air one by one, or change their tone and content so obviously that it's clear that they represent new bosses and new power structures, if they aren't censored or taken off the air by the government in a desperate last ditch effort to maintain the loyalty of its erstwhile citizens. With rioting and starvation deepening in most major cities, an untrustworthy racially mixed armed forces, and hundreds of thousands of unsupported servicemen and citizens stuck overseas with no way home, the Federal position will be untenable. Martial law will be invoked, but it won't solve their problems, only exacerbate them. Habeas Corpus may be suspended, but it won't save them. Even direct military action against civilians will only further fragment their weak coalition. People will turn inward, and redevelop local and regional loyalties, concerning themselves with their own day to day survival. Washington, D.C. might as well be on Mars, then.

EthnoState

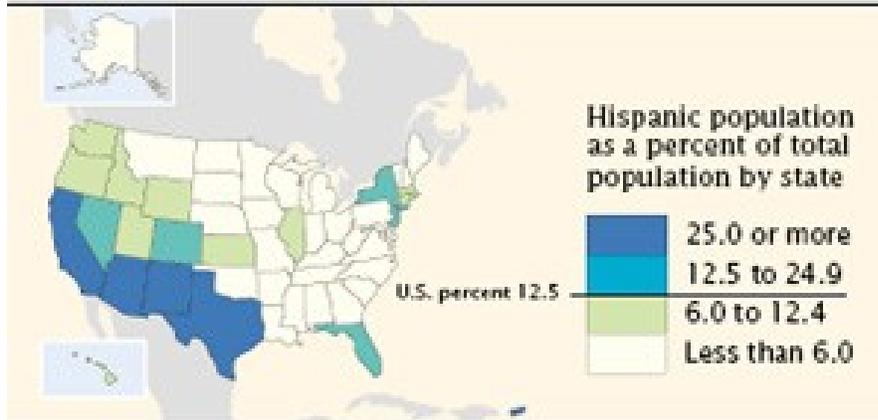

The internet will last a bit longer, for those who have power and access to it. Local radio station and tv stations, likewise, will eventually either go silent or become the mouthpieces of regional warlords consolidating their power base. The same can be said for old fashioned print newspapers, which could experience a revival if they maintain the supplies and power to keep printing. Without electric power or running water or gasoline for their automobiles, the most fortunate and best prepared Americans will scramble to adapt to a neo-19th century lifestyle. Most of the rest will start getting hungry.

It will take many months, or even years, for the front lines to solidify. During that time, black and Hispanic enclaves in many cities will either be exterminated, starved out, or forced to surrender and be deported. The same is true of White enclaves in predominantly black or Hispanic areas. Millions will be slaughtered ruthlessly. Millions more will starve and die from disease and cold during the first winter after the collapse. Power will shift back and forth. So will the front. Alliances will be made and broken. Intervention by foreign forces such as the United Nations can be expected, but would be anticipated more in the large diverse population centers of the Mid-Atlantic and Northeastern states, rather than in New America's Heartland. Two or three state governments in Western or Midwestern states which are able to sustain control and form coalitions could become the biggest boys on the block, in that vacuum. The collapse and retreat of civilization will happen more quickly in some places than others, and the recovery of some degree of civil order and modern conveniences and services will happen in some areas more readily than in others, as well. Populations will continue to shift, drastically, as war will force people to vote with their feet. The demographics will segregate themselves out as the survivors become refugees.

The process of Balkanization, then, will not look the same everywhere, or happen at the same time or at the same pace in every place. Those in cities will have to run for their lives. Those in the country may have to learn to milk a cow. Its effects will not be the same everywhere. It will, however, irrevocably change every aspect of American life. It will either take, or alter, your life, and your family's lives. What you do now to prepare yourself and them for it, could make the difference in whether you will live to see how it all turns out. Make your plan, make it known to those with the need to know, and stick to it.

Chapter Six

Let's Get Personal

Very few of us are in the kind of shape we should be in, frankly. Take an honest assessment of your physical health. If the collapse came next week, would you be able to run a mile without stopping, if you had to? How about a half mile? How about a hundred yards? Could you hike ten miles in a day? With a full backpack and firearm to carry?

Do you know how to ride a horse? How about how to catch, saddle, and bridle one? Since we discussed above a consideration of what medicines you need to survive, do you know how to forage for medicinal or nutritional herbs that could be used as alternative remedies to your prescriptions? How about wild plants that can be used as food sources, how many of them can you identify and know how to prepare properly? Especially plants native to the areas you will be staying in or travelling through? Training isn't all just physical, much of it is mental, in developing a tough, ruthless attitude, and learning what you can now, to use later.

Do you know enough about self-defense and martial arts to protect yourself in unarmed combat? Does your family? Even young children can and should be taught some rudimentary self-defense methods. Developing the strength and stamina for hand to hand combat, and for travelling long distances under human power, is something which you can begin doing, right now.

What if your kids, God forbid, were on their own? Are you teaching your children as much as is age appropriate, how to take care of themselves in other ways? While homeschool can provide parents with control over the book lessons, it also, perhaps even more importantly, gives parents the ability to teach their kids independent life skills, things that will be useful in a collapse of any kind or even in an emergency. If the grid collapsed or you were somehow separated from your child, would your child be able to survive without you? Would your older kids be able to help keep your younger kids alive? Can they cook enough to feed themselves, for example? Do they know where they could find the highest percentage of White people, and which direction to head for safety, if worst comes to worst and you are not there to lead them to a safe refuge?

Much like talking to your kids about the birds and the bees, the discussion of where to head if civil order collapses and you aren't around can be understandably awkward. With that in mind, make your instruction age appropriate, and put the feed down there where the chickens can get at it. For kids under ten, I'd recommend telling them which adults are trustworthy, and which authority figures. Beyond that, instruct them to go to the nearest available relative, neighbor, or friend whom you would trust with your child's life. Of course, tell them to avoid and distrust any "other" people, such as strangers, especially strangers who are not White.

For older kids, allow them to observe and listen in on your rendezvous and safe haven plans. Let them know where the potential danger areas are, and the red zones of nonWhite population areas. In general, if you live in the Southeastern or the Southwestern U.S., the safe direction for them to travel is North, avoiding larger towns and staying off of highways and interstates as much as possible. If you live within a hundred miles of either coast, the safe direction to travel is inland. Discuss with them where the nearest areas are that are predominantly White, and the safest routes to take to get there. Familiarize them with the maps of the areas, and take a family vacation driving from your home to the rendezvous points and safe havens, so they can see these areas for themselves.

I trust that I didn't do my readers a disservice by describing in the previous chapter a scenario in which The Balk is a slow, creeping collapse, rather than an overnight paradigm shift. You may have time to get in better shape gradually, day by day, as life becomes a bit more grueling and demanding, and physical exercise more commonplace. You could lose fat and gain muscle in the several weeks it takes for the grid to succumb to neglect and abuse, before the gas runs out locally, and the lights go out forever. That would be a less abrupt and painful transition, wouldn't it?

The reality is, though, that we just can't guarantee how slow the collapse will be. You might or might not have time to stock up on groceries and seeds and read up on how to grow or procure your own food. You may or may not have a chance to become proficient in armed and unarmed combat. Perhaps you will have time to get the heck out of dodge when the fecal matter strikes the oscillating blades. Or, perhaps not. Are you really apathetic enough to take that chance? Let me put it to you this way. If every major city in America went up in the flames of race riots tonight, how ready would you be? If you're like me, the correct answer is 'not ready enough'. Let's do something about that then, shall we? While we still can?

For an hour a day, or at night, if you prefer, simply get out from behind the computer or off the couch and start walking. Thirty minutes away, and thirty minutes back. Vary the direction you go to break the monotony of exercise. Take an I-pod for music if you want. Just get up and do it. One hour a day. You say you don't have any extra time in your schedule? Then sleep for an hour less at night. The sleep you do get will be more restful, after your exercise. Do that for a month.

The second month, jog for a half hour out, then jog for the half hour back. This will be even more beneficial for your health than walking. After a month of that, try alternating running and walking. Within six months, you should be in good enough shape to tackle longer hikes, and feeling much better, to boot.

The next time that you have a backyard cookout, invite the neighbors over. Without getting into specific politics, talk about how nice it is to have good neighbors that can look out for one another's property, and how grateful you are to have them living nearby. Casually mention how fortunate you both are to live in an area where crime isn't a problem. State that if that ever changed, people might have to work together even more. Suggest, in a very hypothetical way, that if drive-by shootings ever started to happen nearby, or even if people recklessly started speeding past your homes, the day might come when you would have to limit or slow traffic through your neighborhood. Plant the seeds in their mind of hypothetically barricading the street to limit access to your homes, if the other neighbors also agreed, of course. That will potentially open the doors to future conversations, and soften them up for further discussions of mutual defense, as you sound out just how far they might be willing to follow you.

If you plan on hunkering down, then you might seek to develop the kind of interfamilial relationship with one or two of your neighbors where the ladies discuss putting together first aid kits and locating the nearest dependable supplies (creeks, rivers, lakes) of fresh water, while the men can discuss defenses. The kids can learn c.p.r. and fire-starting skills together, under the parents' supervision. Once you have one or two neighbors allied with you, host a "getting to know you" block party, and see how many of the people on your block could be felt out in a similar fashion. Would a few of them be willing to close off and fortify the entire block, if necessary? You get the picture.

Network with those you already agree with politically 'in real life'. Get to know them, and spend time together offline. Invite online friends to your place for a BBQ or a campout, or to go shooting together. Build trust. Let your families get to know one another. Socialize with like-minded people. Make an effort to build bridges and get people together who may have to stand together one day, if they are within a reasonable distance of you, especially.

Over time, the discussion may evolve into how you would handle strangers. Would refugees be welcomed into your collective defended space with open arms, or vetted, first? If they would be vetted, would the interview process favor admission of those most in need, such as the sick, or the elderly, or children, or those with the most skills or resources to contribute to the group? Would you restrict admission based on race or sexual orientation? That one might be important to determine ahead of time, before it comes up. What about resource allocation? Will you collectivize your food and ration it out, or leave to each his own? What about the division of labor? At least in the abstract, some of these ideas can be tossed around before the lights go out.

Strengthening oneself psychologically means knowing yourself intimately, first. Are you the kind of person who could shoot an armed refugee who was an immediate threat to you or your family, or would compassion make you hesitate? What about an armed person who was only a potential threat? What about an unarmed person? What about a woman or a child? These are the kinds of issues that might arise, as well, and should be considered, now.

Of course, not all of us know exactly how we would respond in a survival situation after The Balk. Until we are tested, we can't be sure. Some people might end up being more ruthless than they ever would have thought they could be, and some people may turn out to be weaker than you ever would have imagined. Try to picture yourself in as many different scenarios as possible, though, to determine what areas of mental toughness you need to work on. How do you think you would respond, psychologically, if your wife was raped, or if your children were killed? Would you want to withdraw from life, and be suicidal, or continue living? Under what circumstances, if any, would you consider killing yourself? Under what circumstances, if any, would you consider killing a loved one? Keeping going when there seems to be little hope for the future requires a higher degree of mental toughness than most of us are regularly called on to exhibit. After the collapse, that requirement may come calling more often. Can you answer it, time after time, without breaking?

Sometimes, though, creating an enclave or a defensible compound is just forestalling the inevitable. You should not prepare to stand and fight if you are behind enemy lines. That's why it pays to know, within reason, where those enemy lines might be.

Here are some basic suggestions. Grab a national map of the U.S.. Find your current location. You'll want to play along at home for this exercise.

Many people have asked me, when I began writing this book, where they should go, to be on the safe side of the enemy lines. As I have said, that depends on where you are, now.

If you are anywhere Southeast of Arkansas, Tennessee, and West Virginia, head for those states, whichever one is closest to you. Not just anywhere in those states, but to the mountainous areas of them. The caveat to that is that, as discussed earlier, many Southern Nationalists such as my friend Gregory Kay and the League of the South believe that Whites can and will hold their mud. So, if nothing else, take a look at your local situation, and imagine it going full blown chimp-out, then decide for yourself.

If you are anywhere Southwest of Utah and Colorado, head for the Northern portions of those states. I know some very tough and well prepared, trained guys in Arizona who plan on defending in position, but they are the exception to the rule.

EthnoState

If you are anywhere West of Idaho, head East. If you are anywhere East of Pennsylvania, head West. Unless you are in the far Northeast, of course, which is still one of the Whitest regions of the continent.

Thinking of it like that should put virtually every White person in the U.S. within one day's drive of relative safety.

More specifically, remember the 50/50 plan: if you are anywhere within a fifty mile radius of any city of over 50,000 people, move further away, outside of the red zone.

Now that you know in a general sense where you would be headed, map out various routes to get there based on different contingencies vis-à-vis certain routes being blocked by one threat or another, as I mentioned.

As you exercise your body and mind, as you study, as you network, watch for growing trends such as the shale oil boom peaking and U.S. petroleum production then plummeting, leading to massive unemployment and a crash in our nation's Gross Domestic Product. Be aware of every Federal law which cities, counties, or states refuse to enforce, from the legalization of gay marriage to cannabis, to sanctuary cities. Observe how the election of every Democrat President pushes the red states to begin to defy the national government more and more. After the next election, the Commander in Chief will begin to serve like an ancient ruler of the Holy Roman Empire. They will officially rule over a patchwork of emerging nations which they exercise little real control over. What remains of the poorly maintained infrastructure will be turned into a number of toll roads in many places. For outsiders, costs of travelling through the toll booths could be higher than for citizens of the states they are in, of course. There are a million warning signs that The Balk is imminent. Anything to do with racial strife, riots, protests, and ethnic tension should be a red flag to you.

“Immigrants devoted to their own cultures and religions are not influenced by the secular politically correct façade that dominates academia, news-media, entertainment, education, religious and political thinking today,” according to James Walsh, the former Associate General Counsel of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service. “They claim the right not to assimilate, and the day is coming when the question will be how can the United States regulate the defiantly unassimilated cultures, religions and mores of foreign lands? Such immigrants say their traditions trump the U.S. legal system. Balkanization of the United States has begun.” Indeed. There’s that magic word, again, notice. And these nonWhite third worlders, unassimilatable even if they were willing to be assimilated, may well be the progenitors of the breakup of America.

In a similar tone, Samuel Huntington, the author of ‘Clash of Civilizations’, wrote: “It is my hypothesis that the fundamental source of conflict in this new world will not be primarily economic. The great divisions among humankind and the dominating source of conflict will be cultural. Nation states will remain the most powerful actors in world affairs, but the principal conflicts of global politics will occur between nations and groups of different civilizations. The clash of civilizations will dominate global politics. The fault lines between civilizations will be the battle lines of the future.” When you hear the word ‘culture’, automatically substitute the word ‘race’. They are one and the same, insofar at least as culture is a product of race. That’s why ‘multiculturalism’ is a euphemism for ‘multiracialism’. Whenever you hear the word ‘civilization’, think ‘race’, as well. Obviously only one race ever created civilization. Whites. Asians can maintain it but not invent it, and blacks can do neither, even when it is handed to them. So what Huntington is saying is that the trend for future global conflicts in the 21st century will be racial warfare. I agree.

According to columnist Frosty Wooldridge, “Mexican-Hispanic-Latino crime dominates cities like Los Angeles, Houston, San Antonio, Chicago and Miami. Mexican illegal aliens fill 40 percent of California’s prisons. That state houses the most illegal alien migrants of any state in the Union. As the most popular immigrant state for legal and illegal entries, California’s schools house over 150 different languages from all over the world. At least 50 percent dropout rates guarantee students “graduate” functionally illiterate in the English language as well as their own language.

Today, in Minneapolis, with nearly 100,000 Somali immigrants, immigrant children cause endless learning failures for American kids vying for attention in schools dominated by dozens of different languages. Thus, scant learning manifests in those schools. (Source: “Anger, resentment over school diversity”; USA Today, Nov 26, 2014, by Greg Toppo.)

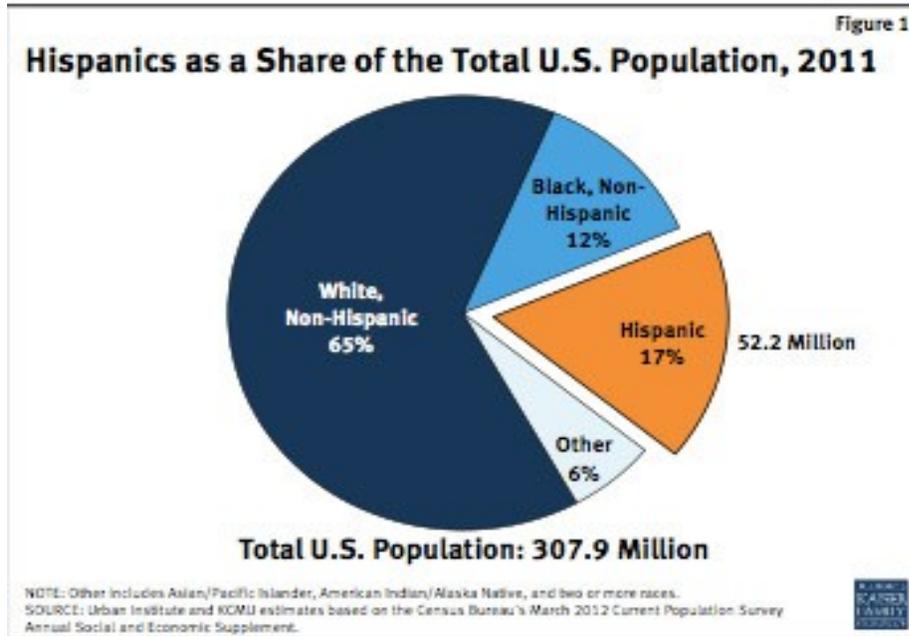

Chicago, New York City, Atlanta and Detroit face similar problems. In the Denver Post from November of 2014, we learn that Denver Public Schools must now teach to 172 different languages from immigrants from over 140 different countries around the world. The world houses 180 countries give or take a revolution and drawing of new boundaries.”

The only way out, the only solution, the only means of securing the future for our children, is to make it 184 or so. Think about that while you're out jogging around for an hour each day. Every time you feel sore or tired, blame Hart and Cellar and Kennedy and the rest who opened up the floodgates of nonWhite immigration in 1965. Blame the manipulative Jews who use their ownership of the news and entertainment media to promote White genocide. Blame every White man you know who won't speak up for his people. They're the reason your legs are cramping and your lungs are burning. Let it turn. Let it fuel you. Let it drive you. You're on your way to New America.

Chapter Seven

Let me count the ways...

Organically, there are three to five distinct regions developing into the foundations of new nations within the boundaries of the current United States. The Southeast, becoming more black as Whites move out to the upper South and blacks from Northern and Midwestern cities move back in; the Southwest, becoming more Hispanic as both legal and illegal Latino immigrants move in, and Whites move North to the Western states; and the Heartland, which is becoming more White. However, both coasts are almost irretrievably mixed. On the West coast, Whites are moving East, and on the East coast, Whites are moving West. Considering the potential for Chinese intervention and occupation of the West and United Nations intervention and occupation of the East coasts when America goes down, that makes five distinct regions. Whether they will further Balkanize into more, will depend on how barbaric things get, and how splintered the three primary groups are culturally and politically. This is the scenario, at least, that I outline in my 'Hasten The Day' trilogy. None of us have a crystal ball, of course, but it's the theory I'm working off of, based on ongoing demographic shifts within the U.S. and my observation of the Yugoslavian experience.

Ferguson, Missouri, was a 90% White town just two decades ago. As more blacks moved in, more Whites moved out. Eventually, the city council and mayor and city government became all black, as blacks voted to elect their own co-racialists. Yes, blacks, and Hispanics, overwhelmingly vote racially. They did so in the last two Presidential elections, as well. The President won 95 percent of the black vote and 43 percent of the White vote in 2008, according to exit polling, and 93 percent of the black vote and 39 percent of the White vote in his re-election. Only liberal Whites, who are a significant minority of our people, fail to vote racially.

Similarly, large areas of France, especially in Paris and Marseilles, have Balkanized because of nonWhite Muslim immigration. As more Muslims move in, more Whites move out, and Shariah law becomes the either de facto or the literal de jure law in those neighborhoods. Just as in Ferguson, Whites no longer even go there. It isn't safe for them to.

The recent mass demonstrations by tens of thousands of White patriots in France and Germany against Muslim immigration under the PEGIDA banner, even opposed by the anti-White governments in those nations as they were, inspired millions to take a vocal stand against the invasion. German Chancellor Merkel's regime financed left-wing and Muslim counter-demonstrators, fed and transported them at taxpayer expense to the rally sites, and sought to arrest and prosecute the anti-immigration protest leaders. Then, the German government bussed in thousands of African refugees to Dresden, where most of the Nationalists hailed from, in retaliation. Still, despite the government's attempts to divide and discredit the protest organizers, they continued. They grew. And, they made certain areas of Germany, especially, much less attractive to Muslims as potential cities to immigrate to. In that regard, at least, they were successful, in a regionally limited sense. Sometimes during an invasion, you take a stand and force the enemy to flow around you, if you have nowhere left to retreat. There may well be certain initially large enclaves of Whites, such as in the Gulf Coast region, which have to put this strategy into play, during The Balk.

According to a recent (July 2015) New York Times/C.B.S. News poll, 60% of Americans of all races describe racial relations in the U.S. as "generally bad". That's more than the percentage of the popular vote received by any winning Presidential candidate since 1972, the year that I was born. And, most of the people who are the most polarized in the United States, the five percent on each end of the political spectrum who are actually eager for Balkanization and would say that racial relations are VERY bad, aren't the kind of folks who are likely to read the New York Times or watch C.B.S. News, or be polled by them. As discussed before, they get their news and information from less controlled sources which agree with and reinforce their own preconceived worldviews. So, the real number might be as high as three-quarters.

Sixty-eight percent of blacks now say that race relations in the U.S. are generally bad, twice the level as just after Obama was elected, and about the same as just after the acquittal of the police officers who arrested Rodney King in 1992, during the L.A. Riots. Interestingly, seven percent of White respondents stated that blacks were MORE favored to get ahead in American society than Whites, up two percent from last year. Seven percent. More than twice the number of Americans who supported independence at the beginning of the first revolution. What all this means, as the title of the report admits, is that the racial divide in America is growing, and rapidly. They are also separating themselves out physically. As the article on the poll states, "In large measure, the poll found that blacks and Whites live in separate societies. Most Whites say they do not live (79 percent), work (81 percent), or come in regular contact (68 percent) with more than a few blacks."

As of this writing the country of Myanmar, formerly called Burma, is dealing with its Muslim minority by rounding up and deporting them. It seems that they don't want to become another Asian Muslim nation like Indonesia. This is a very nice way of dealing with multiculturalism, compared to genocide. Does that mean that the only alternative to deportation is killing off minorities directly? Not necessarily. After all, contrary to popular belief, 'genocide' does not only include mass murdering a people to extinction, as happened to the Whites in Haiti. According to the United Nations conventions on genocide of 1948, Article Two states that genocide can be any organized effort to deprive a people of their culture, identity, or institutions...kind of like what is being done to Whites in the United States and Europe, today. Diversity then, especially when it is promoted, legislated, and enforced by the government, equals White genocide. Today, multiculturalism is an existential threat to White people. The fact that it is only targeted at White nations and White communities makes that abundantly clear. The fact that they aren't being lined up and shot right now is supposed to make what is being done to us provide a sense of some kind of relief. At least the knockout game hasn't happened on their street yet, people think, right?

Do you know why that is? Do you know why they're glad to just be left alone, personally, at this point? Because noone wants to be the first one over the top of the trenches, charging into the machine gun fire. But, somebody has to be. When you leap, don't stop to look behind and see if anyone is following you. They will be. Just keep your eyes on the prize. Your act of encouragement will inspire others, without that even being a conscious goal of you just being who and what you are: a leader.

Let's talk now about what I call the 'radical flank effect', as it relates to the Balkanization process. It's part and parcel of the dialectic struggle, as first expressed by Hegel and later by Marx as what he called 'dialectic materialism'. Basically, whenever there are two diametrically opposed ideologies clashing, they tend to each move towards the other and adopt certain features of the other, just as capitalism became more socialistic and communism became more laissez-faire and 'perestroika' during the cold war. Today's conservatism is yesterday's liberal position. Conservatives, afraid of being called 'racist', are always on the retreat, while liberals are always on the advance. That is why conservatism is no solution to our problems, it only exacerbates it. Conservatives want America to be turned into a majority nonWhite, third world cesspool through legal immigration, rather than through illegal immigration. To your grandkids, the subtle nuances of that difference won't matter much. But at least, on the way to extinction, conservatives can avoid what they fear most, being called 'racist'.

Expressly, the strongest of two competing worldviews pushes the weaker back, and whichever worldview is most rigid and unyielding, loses less ideological space. So, the more radical one is, the more extreme, the more you win. If not you directly, even if your reputation or credibility are martyred, then your cause still wins, because the radical flank effect allows a more extreme expression of an ideology to make a slightly more moderate expression of virtually the same ideas to seem more palatable to the mainstream by comparison. Therefore, my advice to activists and patriots is always to take as hard and extreme a position as possible, to give the person slightly to your left more wiggle room to present a 'compromise' which is much closer to what you propose yourself than anything that the opposition would have ever accepted previously. Make the enemy relieved to be able to accept having their toe cut off by threatening to cut off their foot. Make them relieved to have their foot cut off by threatening to decapitate them.

Everything is relative. Water always flows to the easiest path. So does human public opinion.

Curtis Hoagland, the CEO of a global social marketing agency, pointed out in a University of Pennsylvania presentation online, ironically, that "...the more extreme the personality and sensibility of the author in relation to the affinity, the more popular he or she is on social media. Affinities such as friendship, religion, political belief and geography devolve into narrower and narrower versions of themselves. The true purpose of the ISIS videos is not to shock Westerners outraged by the savagery; their purpose is to recruit like-minded zealots to the cause and establish their brand promise under a black flag. The ecosystem of social media is predicated on delivering more of what the user already likes. This, precisely, is the function of a Follow or Like." Once again, people tend to follow those who are going in the same direction that they are, who are just a couple of steps farther along. That's why YOU, dear reader, need to be the one out in front, so that you can be a person of influence in your community, and a future leader of our New America.

Already, it is forming. For over twenty years, the migrations have been taking place. Just looking at one state, for instance, California, is astounding. In 1990, the Coeur d'Alene Press reported that one Orange County family had convinced "half its neighborhood" to relocate to Coeur d'Alene. According to the L.A. Times newspaper, over five hundred White California police officers, among them Mark Fuhrman of O.J. Simpson trial fame, have moved to Northern Idaho alone since the 1990s. The population of Kootenai County there has quadrupled in a single generation, mainly due to these White refugees, who have transformed local and county politics. In a High Country Press article from March of 2013 titled 'How Right Wing Emigrants Conquered North Idaho', the local reporter wrote that what had been a Democrat-leaning blue area is now a conservative bastion where only Republicans are office holders. Nearly two million Whites in total have fled California since the L.A. riots of twenty years ago for Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, and Colorado. And, they're not through leaving, yet.

They're also not the only ones being driven out of southern California by the Hispanic invasion. It's not just from urban areas of the north that blacks are migrating back to the old South. Thirty-seven thousand blacks from Los Angeles have moved back to Georgia, and 29,000 to Florida, fueling the formation of New Africa and displacing southern Whites in turn, like dominos falling in a row. The Roman empire fell, in the end, because the Huns pushed the Bulgars and the Goths into them.

Speaking of the domino effect, former ambassador George F. Kennan, one of the principle Cold War architects of the policy of ‘containment’ of Communist expansion, (under what they referred to as the ‘Domino Theory’, that if one country was allowed to fall to Communism, its neighbors might follow) repeatedly and vocally advocated for the United States to be divided up into twelve separate nations. In a July 27th, 2015 Observer opinion article, Bernard Quigley recorded that “Thomas Naylor, a retired Duke economist living in Vermont, said he had received ten personal letters from Mr. Kennan and several telephone calls between 2001 and 2003. “The subject was always the same—secession, the peaceful dissolution of the United States with Vermont leading the way,” writes Mr. Naylor. “Kennan was a closet secessionist.”

While in the realm of ambassadors and foreign policy, let’s take a look at how the rest of the world might be affected by The Balk. This section is for our overseas readers. My fellow Americans, pretend to care. Some of these countries will become new friends and enemies of our future New America.

Closest to home, Canada will likely balkanize as well, following the American model closely, as they do in most things aside from personal freedoms. British Columbia will be occupied by the Chinese along with the rest of the West Coast. The prairie provinces are likely candidates to join New America. The Northern territories will revert to the Inuit and Nunavit. Quebecois will get their much sought-after independence, perhaps allied with France. And, the Maritime provinces will probably be allied with the U.S. Northeastern states and go whichever way they go, probably to a U.N. protectorate. The most populated areas, such as Ontario, will be just as bloody and racially mixed up as any U.S. megalopolis, with similar results for all concerned. Except that White Canadians have fewer privately owned guns, so, their options are more limited.

Mexico, Central America, and much of South America will regress in technology and stability, with the possible exception of Argentina and a couple of other outliers with a high percentage of European population. Expect a number of overlapping regional wars to be fought conventionally across the southern tier of the continent. Gringos will be massacred as things go into a tailspin. Whether they can maintain control of their countries will depend on how plentiful and how determined they are to hold on. Mexico will probably send troops north of the erstwhile border to help Hispanics in the U.S., before it fragments when the cartels, losing their customer base with the U.S. economy and transport systems tanking, seeking political power instead.

In Europe, expect Nationalist parties to rise without American liberal influence, followed by an attempt to deport or segregate their nonWhite Muslim immigrants, Africans, and Jews. The success of these efforts will vary from nation to nation. Eastern Europe, which will become more ruthless more quickly, may end up in better shape than Western Europe, in that regard. Russia will experience a great resurgence in power and prestige, as might Germany and France, if they can solve their refugee problem. Although the loss of the massive economic engine of the U.S. will cause a global depression, in the long run it could work out well for the old countries, should they decide to take advantage of every opportunity. Getting involved in the American civil war by sending Expeditionary or Peacekeeping forces, with or without NATO or UN helmets, would not be advisable for them. Developing trade with New America as it emerges, would. They will need raw materials, mineral resources, and of course grain and beef and other foodstuffs; New America will need finished machinery, vehicles, aircraft, ammunition, firearms, weapons, and medical supplies. The partnership could be quite symbiotic. One would hope that Russia might be an ally to New America, optimistically. We'll need all the help we can get, comrades.

Obviously, without the threat of direct U.S. military intervention on their behalf, Israel has the life expectancy of a tubercular moth, once the U.S. Federal government Balkanizes and the Arabs smell blood. The Jews have enough nuclear weapons to immolate Cairo, Baghdad, Tehran, Beirut, Ankara, and a dozen other neighbors, but not enough to kill every Muslim in the Middle East, which is what they would have to do to survive as the racially based Zionist state that they are today. Expect, absent the kind of genetically tailored virus I write in for 'Waiting For The Sun', to see a Muslim region stretching from India to Italy. Then it will fragment as they start killing one another over Sunni vs. Shiite and lesser divisions. Sic Transit Gloria Jihadi.

India could break apart into Muslim vs. Hindu halves, both with huge populations and a nuclear arsenal. It could also go to war with China, which will be gobbling up territory in every direction, as previously discussed. Japan, without natural resources, would be extremely vulnerable to Chinese expansion. Australia and New Zealand, might, as well, or their worries might lie closer to home, with the populous and Muslim Indonesia. The two White nations will also experience a shortage of imported parts and products which they cannot manufacture themselves, or haven't, but should be able to survive the change relatively intact, otherwise.

Africa, without Western aid, will become a charnal house of warring tribes, rampant disease, and barbarism. The population there should tank by one-half the first few years, then level off, gradually, at a pre-industrial standard of living. Don't expect any Whites to survive on the continent, unless they band together quickly and stake out a chunk of territory to defend vigorously. Cough, Orange Free State, cough.

As I stated previously about specific states, for those who live in the U.S.; those European readers, or South African, or wherever you might be, should also consider immigrating if at all possible to a majority White area if you are not already in one secure and populous enough to survive as a viable enclave. Other than specific geographic prognostications, everything said of preparations to survive the Balkanization of America may also be said of your own interests should your own nation destabilize following the absence of American economic, military, and political influence abroad. Look in your cupboard and about your house. Imagine doing without everything made in America. Then imagine how a worldwide economic depression caused by the collapse of the U.S. would affect distribution and transportation for your own area. Imagine how political alliances would shift. Who would benefit, and who would be weakened? Consider how your family's future would be affected, both directly and indirectly, in the long term. Would you miss us? Or would you hate to see us go, but love to watch us leave? How would you make it without us? Would you be better off than you are now? Think of it as a mental exercise. Write our eulogy in blood.

Another mental exercise, for those both foreign and domestic, is to think of how many acquaintances and friends you have. How many of them are such casual acquaintances that you do not discuss politics or religion or other sensitive subjects with them to any depth? How many of them do you already know that you disagree with politically or religiously, and so avoid the topic? Most people do not have a cause, at least not yet. If you do, as many of my readers do, you are already different, set apart, estranged from them, in your true inner life. Most people are a mile wide and an inch deep. Probe their depths.

Now, somewhat harder, how many distant relatives do you have who you can say the same about, whom you are polite to at family events, but wouldn't be friends with, if you weren't related? How many of them must you avoid awkward political discussions with? Whether it is a co-worker, a casual friend, or a cousin, almost all of us have people peripherally in our lives with whom we might have to redefine the nature of our association following The Balk. Why? Well, obviously politics and religion will come to be much more important than work gossip or the ball game or Aunt Edna's casserole, when America falls apart. People will be killing and dying over those differences. In most Civil Wars, eventually situations have arisen where it became literally brother against brother. If your cousin showed up with his Mexican girlfriend and their half-Mexican kids in the middle of a race war and wanted refuge, that could put you automatically on a whole different side. What would you do? Now would be the time to evaluate everyone in your family and your circle of friends, to decide.

In most refugee scenarios, the first instinct is to seek out friends and family, naturally enough. Could you imagine 'doubling up' with your brother-in-law and his family, while every mouthful of food they ate came from your kids' table? Even if he was a great guy to hang out with before the war, would you want to live with him, after things got messy? Even under the best circumstances, that could be uncomfortable. So, it all depends on what you are willing to put up with, and from whom.

Who can you trust to not steal from you and your family? Who can you trust to be alone with your wife and your kids? Who can you trust to not act stupid and create a feud with your neighbors? Who can you trust to not decide to be a noncombatant or want to switch sides, when it's time to fight? Those with divided racial loyalties could be untrustworthy, obviously. Sympathy and compassion for the 'other' could be a fatal liability. Having too many scruples, likewise. What kind of person would you most like to cohabitate with, and have your fate bound inexorably to theirs? Which of your friends and family simply don't make the cut? Which might you take a chance on and let in, regardless? Under what criteria? How much canned food they show up with? How close kin they are? Where do you draw your lines?

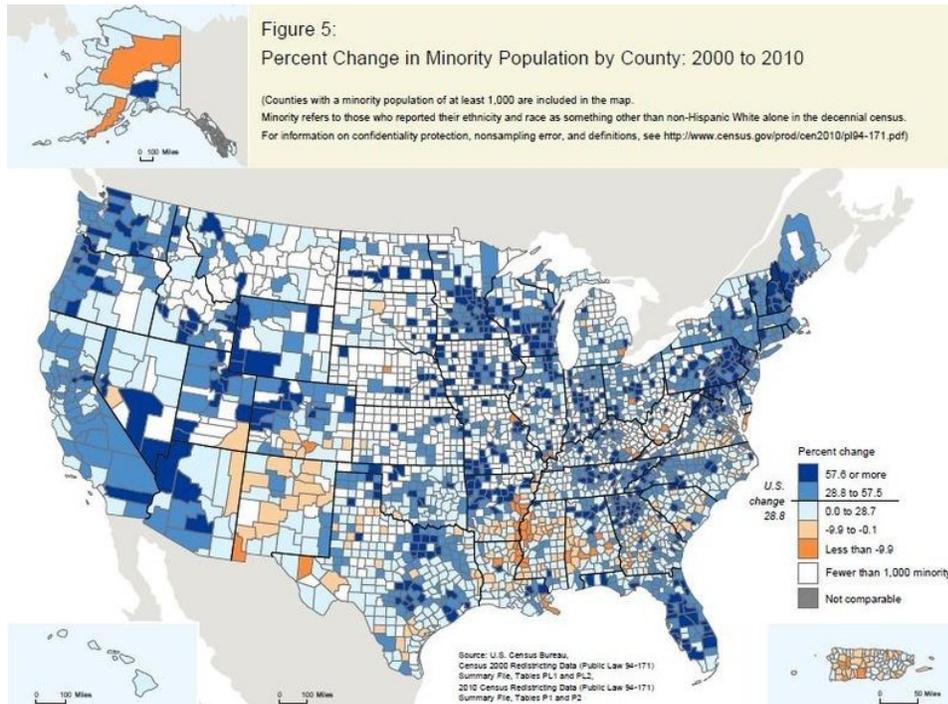

Think of it in terms of lifeboat morality. You cannot save everyone. Does that mean that you will lock the windows and refuse to save anyone, or that you will fling open your doors and refuse to save yourself and your family? If there is a middle ground, then that will require some discrimination. The best way to accomplish discrimination is through prejudice, beforehand. Be prejudiced, and discriminate.

Chapter Eight

Lessons Learned

As I was writing this book, Montenegro became a new nation. They're not alone. A full three-quarters, 75%, of the nations in the United Nations today simply didn't exist fifty years ago. Since there's not been all of that much new real estate created in that time, it begs the question, 'from whence they came'? The answer, is from Balkanization. It happens all the time. All of the cool kids are doing it. We should try it, too. Come on, first one's free.

It's not just Sieg-Heiling White Nationalists who think so. Even left-wing Hispanics such as former Mexican government official and Harvard professor Juan Enriquez asked in his 'The United States of America: Polarization, Fracturing, and Our Future', "Can a country be like a marriage that has run out of cash and steam, resulting in the inevitable frank discussions about just who is pulling his or her own weight? Eventually, even those who love each other sometimes conclude they cannot stay together." And how much more so, we wonder, for those who never loved each other to begin with, for those forced together in arranged shotgun marriages based on domestic abuse?

Enriquez posits that his native Mexico may balkanize into four separate countries, one of which will include the current U.S. border states, within our lifetimes. He also foretells the breakup of America along racial and cultural lines. Will the stars and stripes still fly over you, fifty years from now? If so, how many stars will it have? Fifty? Fifty-five? Forty-five? From the outsider's view of America that Enriquez represents, "When the enemy was outside—for example, the threat perceived when the Soviet Union launched Sputnik and people feared America would lose the brain race—we rallied. Now the enemy is within, and we polarize. Defaming the legitimacy of people on the "other" side becomes the currency of the day, where people in blue states are seen as godless liberal elitists and those in red states are seen as, well, rednecks." Well, of course, he's right, Because they ARE, by God!

Now, we've talked about some of the worst case scenarios, and I've alluded to the fact that the decline might be slower and softer than myself and Thomas Chittum believe. I've even implied that a quick death would be better for our people, and our nation, as it would allow for a larger percentage of Whites to survive and hold on to more territory, and therefore take back the rest of the continent earlier than otherwise would be the case. But what of the slow death, the gentler going into the (not so) good night?

As Alfred W. McCoy through Salon magazine reported in their article "How America Will Collapse", "in 2008, the U.S. National Intelligence Council admitted for the first time that America's global power was indeed on a declining trajectory. In one of its periodic futuristic reports, Global Trends 2025, the Council cited "the transfer of global wealth and economic power now under way, roughly from West to East" and "without precedent in modern history," as the primary factor in the decline of the "United States' relative strength — even in the military realm."

Here's the optimistic, from the flag-waving patriots (and Professor McCoy's) vantage, possibility: When the U.S. dollar loses its special status as the world's reserve currency, the cost of imports will soar. We already run third behind China and the European Union in overall economic clout based on production and exports, with India not far behind. Unable to pay for swelling deficits with devalued Treasury notes, the military budget will have to be slashed, forcing the withdrawal of U.S. forces from Asia, the Middle East, and Europe, back to our own continent. But this scenario fails to factor in immigration, racial strife, the growing polarization of the electorate, and the widening gulf between political ideologies. To put it bluntly, we're not going to get off that easily.

Let's review, shall we?

"Political power grows out of the barrel of a gun." - Mao Tse-tung

"I am not an American; I am one of twenty-two million black people who are victims of Americanism." - Malcolm X

"It is in the North that the final and climatic battle over the carcass of imperial America will be fought, and an exclusively white nation will likely arise." - Thomas W. Chittum (Civil War Two)

"I was actively discriminating against whites. While selecting college students for officer candidate school, I routinely turned down long lines of qualified white males to save room for blacks. I denied whites interviews. Every few months I threw stacks of their resumes into the trash." - Marine Corps Captain, C. J. Chivers (The Nation, "Looking For A Few Good (Black) Men", Oct. 16, 1995, Pg. 428)

"The great questions of the day will be decided not by speeches and majority votes ... but by iron and blood." - Otto Von Bismark

"People who are vigorous and brutal often find war enjoyable, provided that it is a victorious war and that there is not too much interference with rape and plunder." - Bertrand Russell

"May you live in interesting times!" - Unknown (Ancient Chinese Curse)

"The Deep Green'ers took over Oregon ... If you weren't one of them, you didn't get a breathing license, and they tied a plastic bag over your head." - William Lind (The Washington Post, "Militant Musings", April 30, 1995, Sect. 3, p. 3)

"We have a double vision. We look at our diversity, and we also look at Bosnia - and we worry." - Ronald Takaki (Professor of Ethnic Studies, University of California, Berkley)

"There are a thousand hacking at the branches of evil to one who is striking at its root." - Henry David Thoreau

"We must act with vindictive earnestness against the Sioux, even to their extermination, men, women, and children. Nothing less will reach the root of the cause." - Gen. William T. Sherman

Everyone wants to think that they're the center of the Universe, which is why Galileo had such a rough time of it. As a corollary, people like to think that human existence will end with them, which explains the popularity of apocalyptic fiction and movies. In the year 999, people gave away all of their possessions and stood around outside awaiting the rapture. Every generation expects to be the last. A thousand years later, we're still hopeful.

But The Balk, ultimately, is not about an end. It's about a new beginning, a return, a recovery. Humanity was tooling along just fine, until the designated driver dozed off and somebody from the back seat grabbed the wheel. We're headed for the ditch, all right, but this will be our chance to either slam on the brakes, or shove open the door and roll out. Let's hope for a soft landing.

My duty as a watchman is to warn the people I care about and have accepted a responsibility for about the present and coming dangers we will face. This book is a part of my effort to sound the alarm. Even odds are that the United States of America is headed towards Balkanization, or breaking up into smaller, racially based nations, within the next decade. It MIGHT not, but if you believe in preparing for tornadoes or hurricanes or a Zombie Apocalypse, then Balkanization is more likely than either of those three, and worth taking out insurance to cover. The kind of psychological, physical, and geographical insurance which just might save your family's lives, when America falls apart.

The most important insurance policy that you can invest in, is making sure that you are on the right side of the front lines when the lights go out for good. I hope this book has encouraged you to, in the words of the old R.E.M. song, “Stand in the place where you live,

Now face north,

Think about direction,

Wonder why you haven't before,

Now stand in the place where you work,

Now face west,

Think about the place where you live,

Wonder why you haven't before-
If you are confused, check with the sun,
Carry a compass to help you along,
Your feet are going to be on the ground,
Your head is there to move you around...
If wishes were trees, the trees would be falling,
Listen to reason, reason is calling,
Your feet are going to be on the ground,
Your head is there to move you around,
So stand (Stand!)”

Just don't stand there for too long, waiting to make up your mind. New America is coming. The Balk is approaching. Will you be ready?

The End

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: An author of both fiction and nonfiction books, Billy Roper is a former high school and junior high History, Civics, Economics, and Geography teacher. He has been a candidate for public office, a lifelong political activist, leader, and spokesman. Mr. Roper has a Bachelor's degree in History and Political Science and a Master of Liberal Arts degree in History with a specialty in Anthropology. He currently resides with his wife, stepson, and other animals in what will become New America. Mr. Roper may be reached through e-mail at roper_billy@yahoo.com.

ALSO BY THIS AUTHOR:

Look Away: an alternate history of the Civil War

In 'Look Away, an alternate history of the Civil War', history hangs by a thread. A single moment can create ripples which change everything. What if Mary Todd Lincoln had a bad night's rest? A harsher Emancipation Proclamation causes slave revolts, reprisals, and a different end to the South's invasion of Pennsylvania. Intervention by European powers on both sides of the conflict transform the American Civil War into The Great War, with global repercussions for everyone involved!

The Balk: What does it mean, and what will it mean to America's future?

Demographic statistics and shifting Census data indicate that growing political polarization, racial tensions, and the element of change in America's culture and society brought on by both legal and illegal immigration are all leading towards the Balkanization of America. Looting and riots. Culture Wars. A looming minority majority. What will this mean for your future, and for our nation? This nonfiction book will help you get your head around what is coming, and prepare you to survive the collapse and breakup of the United States! This is the book that Thomas Chittum would write today, if he wasn't so politically correct. Written by Billy Roper with an introduction by Gregory Kay.

The Big Picture

Encompassing the collective wisdom of the human species throughout history in one easily accessible, portable volume, 'The Big Picture' has been called "the handbook of the Alt Right". This literary mini-encyclopedia, a veritable written internet, anthologizes clickable interfaces in brilliant black and white colors. Also serves as a convenient snack mat or coaster! Banned for possession in Israel and several of its client states even before publication, this nonfiction philosophical treatise was written with those who like to read and think in mind. Are you tired of stumbling around blindly, in an ignorant haze, perplexed by the world around you? What if there was a book that could make sense of your apparently meaningless existence? Are you searching for a reason to live? Do you have the money to purchase 'The Big Picture'? If so, then this is the book for you! Thousands of brilliant and essential words, many of them arranged in coherent, complete sentences in paragraph form, for page after page, chapter after chapter! Never before published in this order; well, the chapters and pages perhaps, but not the words. Turn it over, look admiringly at the cover, and you'll be amazed by 'The Big Picture'! Even MORE inside.

The Hasten The Day Trilogy

Here, for the very first time, are the award-winning and highly acclaimed Balkanization trilogy by Billy Roper: 'Hasten The Day', 'Waiting For The Sun', and 'Wasting The Dawn', published together in a single anthology. Included in this newly revised, edited, and updated collection is all new material, including previously deleted scenes and an alternate ending to this rollicking post-apocalyptic adventure series.

Remnants

'Blade Runner' meets 'Idiocracy' in this dystopian view of a future where political correctness has come full circle to bite its own tail. Hard science fiction, romance, and post-apocalyptic adventure fans will love this controversial book with its many twists and turns along the way to a stunning and climactic finish. Fast forward half a millennium. You'll want to rewind and make sure this story never comes true. Not for the faint of heart or dim of vision. 'Remnants' will shake you up!

Hasten The Day: The First Year Of The Balkanization Of America

It's this time, next year. Hyperinflation, the collapse of the dollar, and economic depression have America on the ropes, when uncontrolled illegal immigration delivers a sucker punch to the glass jaw of multiracial democracy. Race riots and secessions lead to ethnic cleansing and Balkanization. 'Hasten The Day' chronicles the first year after the breakup of the United States into several independent nations. If you believe that what cannot fly must fall, you won't want to miss reading "Hasten The Day"!

Waiting For The Sun: Hasten The Day, Part II

Five years after hyperinflation, bank failures, and a stock market crash combine with uncontrolled immigration to lead to the breakup of the United States, new nations arise and compete in the ashes of the former superpower.

Wasting The Dawn: Hasten The Day, Part III

The third and conclusive installment in the highly acclaimed 'Hasten The Day' trilogy, 'Wasting The Dawn' continues the dystopian speculative fiction saga began in the award-winning 'Hasten The Day' and its' sequel, the popular 'Waiting For The Sun', both also by Billy Roper. After economic collapse and civil war lead to the breakup of the United States, global chaos ensues. Eighty percent of the world's population lies dead. In the aftermath, the familiar characters from the first two novels meet their ultimate destinies, and the next generation of successors emerge from the ashes of America to compete and determine the fate of the world, and mankind.

PaleoAmerican Ethnic Diversity: Ancient Europeans in North America

Originally published in 1999 as a ground-breaking Master's Thesis in completion of the author's Masters of Liberal Arts degree in History with a specialty in Anthropology, this work outlines the mythical, linguistic, cultural, and archaeological evidence supporting the theory that ancient Europeans were present in North America 10,000 years ago, if not earlier.

The Ice Path: A Way Forward

In 'The Ice Path', the best-selling fiction author in the White Nationalist movement deftly interweaves a prehistorical and historical fiction narrative with an autobiographical testimony and nonfiction 'Rules For Racialists' guide to becoming a person of influence within the pro-White movement. From the Solutreans, the White Europeans who discovered North America 17,000 years ago, many millenia before the Asiatic Mongoloid ancestors of the 'Native Americans', to the Viking explorers, English colonists, and American pioneers, the past, present and future of our people are explored within the framework of a destiny surpassing all others. The qualities, nature, and purpose of leadership are explored, and the reader will explore their own calling and destiny as one of tomorrow's leaders, today. "Bone chilling adventure for the politically incorrect!" "Once you realize how you've been lied to, Roper explains why, and then tells you what you can do about it!" "This book makes you feel like you're getting to know the leaders of the White Nationalist movement, when you're really getting to know yourself..." "Where we came from, and where we're going, along with how to get there..."

The Fifth Horseman

'The Fifth Horseman' is a post-apocalyptic fiction novel set in the near future in Northern Arkansas; after an economic collapse, EMP attack, and limited nuclear war bring racial civil warfare and the collapse of society to America. The name used to refer to the fall of civilization within this universe is 'The Balk', shorthand for 'Balkanization'. Tens of millions have died of starvation and disease and war. The rest divide their loyalties into neo-feudal city-states and their territories, struggling for control over the few resources that remain. One man may be able to unite them all. After war, famine, pestilence, and death, he is, The Fifth Horseman. If you liked Clint Eastwood in 'Pale Rider' and Kevin Costner in 'The Postman', you're going to love the movie adaptation of this book, too!

Glome's Saga

It's a thousand years ago. Guess who's coming to dinner?

This first person narrative historical fiction novel is inspired by Erik The Red's Saga and the Greenlander's Saga, as well as similar old Norse tales, and the Heavener runestone(s) in Oklahoma. Follow Glome's life struggle in his own words as he travels from early 11th century Norway to England, Ireland, Iceland, Greenland, and North America. This rollicking Viking adventure about the Norse exploration and attempted colonization of the new land is filled with action, intrigue, and drama, as well as the dark humor typical of the age.

Deja Vu (2nd edition): Travel through time from future space to the ancient past...

What if time travel was possible?

Have you ever wished that you could just start over, and do things better, this time around? That is the feeling haunting a team of NASA scientists marooned on the moon in 2038 when their lunar base is cut off from Earth by a global economic and grid collapse. Faced with eventual starvation and death like so many billions below them on a planet where those who created civilization have become too small of a dwindling minority to sustain it, they face some hard decisions about their future. Necessity being the mother of invention, it leads them to even harder decisions about their past. Deja Vu is that feeling that something that is happening or is about to happen has already been experienced before. What if time travel, backwards only, was possible? What if changes engineered from the future left small moments of ghost memory where the past had been overwritten, like recording over an old fashioned audiotape? We might call that ghost memory of overlap, Deja Vu.

General Population

Called "the politically incorrect, drunken love child of Stephen King and Alfred Hitchcock" by one reviewer, "General Population" tells the intriguing story of Max Aught, a young prisoner locked in a brutally corrupt prison for attempting to kill the child molester who raped his little sister. As society begins to unravel and collapse on the outside, those locked up may be the best hope for our future-if only they can survive to regain their freedom. Containing anecdotal stories and input from over two dozen currently incarcerated contributors, "General Population" is grimly realistic in its depictions of the best and worst of humanity, on both sides of the wire.

CommonWealth

Illustrations by Michael Sheehan. This rollicking, tension-filled alternate history steampunk adventure novel features romance, adventure, espionage, and suspense in a deeply researched, tightly wound narrative following two star-crossed lovers across an eerily familiar landscape, right next door to our own universe. Imagine an America where slavery never happened. Where we are free of that indelible besmirchment on our national character. Oh, and we're still British. Welcome to the Commonwealth.
