

Deep-frozen Minds

Carl Sagan and the other nuclear freezers have been peddling their unilateral arms reduction proposals with the gruesome threat of a worldwide "nuclear winter," a 20th-century fimbul that would put an end to civilization, or what they call civilization. The crux of their argument is that thermonuclear debris will rise high in the sky and form a dark cloud of particles that will block out the sun for years and years, thereby lowering the earth's temperature until we and all our works are frostbitten back into barbarism.

The trouble with Sagan's theory is that dust and hot air rises until it reaches the altitude of the dew point, where water vapor condenses. Then, according to the rules of meteorology, the dust, soot and other particles act as condensation nuclei for water drops. Clouds form, and what should stay up there for Sagan's big freeze falls to earth as rain. This time-tested process of Mother Nature, this atmospheric "wash-out" is something nuclear freeze advocates and Soviet agents carefully avoid mentioning since it contradicts their end-time scenario.

Because they are advancing a new theory to supplant conventional science wisdom on such matters, the burden of proof should fall on the Saganites. Always true to form, however, the media, led by that great meteorologist, Dan Rather, has shifted the burden by giving all the benefit of the doubt to the freezers. We may be sure, however, if Hitler was still around, Sagan -- and Injun Dan -- would be whistling a different tune, one that would probably sing the wisdom of first strikes and the transcendent beauty of mushroom clouds.

Bending the Rules

The National Press Club in Washington used to be a forum for the better class of opinion manufacturers. All that changed last spring when the Zionists packed the place with noisy partisans. It was a scene which men of two and three thousand years ago would have recognized at once.

The occasion was a discussion between Stephen Green, author of Taking Sides: America's Secret Relations with a Militant Israel (available for $14.95 from Liberty Lobby, 300 Independence Ave., S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003), George Ball, once the number-two man in the State Department, Charles Fenyvesi, the editor of Jewish Week, and a neutral moderator. The session had been billed for weeks in advance, but the Israeli lobby in Washington panicked at the last minute at the thought of Green and Ball going two-on-one against Fenyvesi in an open setting. So they rushed in one Daniel Gvron, the little-known author of Israel After Begin. Although, by long tradition, participants must be invited to National Press Club sessions, the self-chosen Gvron was good-naturedly accepted -- along with a clique of 100 supporters who broke every rule in the Club's book by "erupting into applause whenever their [man] uttered a syllable."

George Ball, who ought to know, told those in attendance that our government has been aware of Israeli nuclear weapons for "at least 21 years." He also predicted that if Americans are asked to spill blood for Israel, the nation will be more bitterly divided than at any time "since the Civil War."

Jesse Tips the Rotten Applecart

Analysts of every stripe have recognized that American presidential politics can never again be the same after Jesse Jackson's candidacy. Some are happy about it and others are not. The unhappy ones are mostly the white liberals and the so-called "neoconservatives," two groups with a great deal in common. Those who have been enthused by Jackson include blacks, white ultra-leftists and a significant portion of the white right-wing.

The latter group, embracing many who are not overt racists, can scarcely contain its glee now that the privileged status of Jews and blacks in American political life is being exposed for what it is. Joseph Sobran, a senior editor of National Review, recently had a column entitled "Minority system brought to a crisis." He began by noting the "accredited victim status" of Jews and blacks in American life:

That is, they have an official prejudice -- or should I say presumption -- in their favor. If they want something from you, they are in the right. If you resist, you are continuing to victimize them, or, as they say, "perpetuating" racism (or anti-Semitism, as the case may be)

The minorities also enjoy a privilege of accusation. They can charge you with racism or anti-Semitism at any time. Denying the charge hotly is only further proof of your guilt.

This reads exactly like a page out of Richard McCulloch's book, The Ideal and Destiny. Sobran went on to accuse the liberal-minority coalition of "thought control" in the form of "Holocaust studies" in the public schools. He told a very revealing story:

A few days back, a Jewish assistant editor at a metropolitan newspaper tried to spike a column asking why those who lament the Holocaust don't also lament the mass murders of the Chinese communists. The editor didn't say that the columnist (a staunch Israel supporter) was anti-Semitic, not even just beneath the surface, but he spoke of "sensitivities" and said there was a "perception" that the columnist was "just this side" of anti-Semitism.

But the times are changing:

Until now the minority system has worked smoothly. The minorities get nearly everything they ask for, only they don't ask. They "demand"

But Jesse Jackson has brought the system to an unforeseen crisis. He got blacks accusing Jews of racism, and Jews accusing blacks of anti-Semitism. That is not how the system is supposed to work.

Both groups are fighting fiercely to be top dog among the underdogs. What makes it serious is that nobody can umpire the dispute. White gentiles are of course "prejudiced" against both groups. (Negative attitudes toward minorities are always "prejudices," never conclusions.)

Even liberals are afraid to judge So they stand around wringing their hands and whining that both groups have the same enemies -- which isn't much help when they are each other's enemies.

For which we say, "Thank you, Jesse, for helping to permanently destabilize a sordid state of affairs!"

Whitewashing the Blackguards

The Tacoma, Washington, Sunday News Tribune had an enormous page-one spread on July 1, entitled "Myra recalls Grandpa." Picture an artificial-blonde Barbra Streisand and you have some idea of Myra Lansky, the granddaughter of Meyer, the late mobster who left behind a fortune worth more than $100 million. How many of Myra's WASP friends in Tacoma realized that this local "Methodist" girl was being educated in the traditions of Judaism on the sly?

Myra had nothing but good things to say about granddad and all the "nice men" who were always around him.

He did a lot of good things. He donated five ambulances to Israel. He contributed to Brandeis University, the theater and the arts. He created a lot of jobs for people

He taught me [that] learning through observation is the greatest teacher. Not necessarily how much you read. He never said a thing until after he listened for a long time.

"He loved America so much," said Myra, even making July 4 his birthday. "Everyone that met him loved him."

Myra's father had an apparently honest job in the local aviation industry, yet security remained priority number one around their house. The News Tribune revealed:

Even today Myra said she has a sixth sense of what is going on around her.

"I have eyes in the back of my head," she said. "We did not speak about personal things [in the house] without turning on the water or walking outside . . ."

Myra said she doesn't remember being told the rules of privacy, but always whispered in the house because "people [could be] listening."

Albert Fried's The Rise and Fall of the Jewish Gangster in America belongs to the new genre which takes open pride in the exploits of the kosher nostra. According to Fried, the notorious crime lord Benjamin "Bugsy" Siegel, who established a beachhead for organized crime in California and Nevada, deserves a "place of honor . . . in the history of American culture." "America," writes Fried, "is embracing Bugsy Siegel's vision; his martyrdom was not in vain."

High Society Summer

Senator Kennedy spent a rather dull summer. He did have a public screaming match at the West Palm Beach airport with one of his groupie girlfriends, Cynthia Sykes of the St. Elsewhere TV series, after he had ungalantly refused to stay behind with her when she couldn't get a seat on the Washington flight on which he had been booked. Later on, in Nantucket, Fat Face pub-crawled to a local saloon called The Muse one night. He neglected to bring along his shoes, but that didn't stop him from dancing with himself almost till closing time.

South of Nantucket in Sag Harbor, out on the pincers of Long Guyland, there was celebrated the annual pie-eating, egg-rolling, water-balloon bash known as the Writer's Softball League annual picnic. The rollickers included Mort Zuckerman, the proprietor of U.S. News & World Report and Atlantic, Gloria Steinem, his present steady, and Betty Friedan, the wicked witch of the West -- and East, North and South. The climacteric came when Zuckerman got zapped and soused with a water balloon.

Up in Greenwich, Connecticut, Leona Helmsley, the Jewish spouse of Gentile real estate and hotel mogul Harry Helmsley, has a pleasure dome which would send Kublai Khan into a jealous fit. One day Leona decided she wanted her outdoor pool to become an indoor pool. She laid out $2 million and lo, before summer's end, it was done!

The Ideologues Are Killing Us

"Affirmative action" and "comparable pay" are life-and-death issues. A recent study conducted in New York shows that men working at low-level jobs and at higher levels of stress and social isolation are nearly four times as likely as the general populace to die of a heart attack within three years. The report in the New England Journal of Medicine led Dr. Thomas B. Graboys of Harvard to write, "We can probably obtain as much information about a given patient's risk of dying by talking about what's going on in his life" as by conducting an exhaustive examination with the latest medical technology. Another doctor added that cardiac rehabilitation programs should deal "not only with the heart muscle but the entire individual."

According to Graboys, "The hard-driving executive may have recourse to vent anger and frustration because he's at the top, but the fellow at the middle or low end of the totem pole may be brimming with anger and keeping it under the surface." In the past, such low-on-the-totem-pole men could at least hope to dominate their women, but that is obviously no longer the case. Rich women's-libbers can't understand why many poorer women who are trying to keep a family together won't stand up for their "individual rights." The reason is because the latter are more interested in their children's rights, and instinctively understand that the combination of male sex hormones and low status is already deadly enough without their pushing their husbands down even further. A related factor might be their wish to preserve their husbands' sexual interest and potency.

A University of South Carolina epidemiologist found that men whose wives earn more money than they do suffer a rate of heart disease 11 times greater than men who outearn their wives. As word of these findings begins to get around, men and (most) women alike will demand that either (1) the number of women going into law, medicine and other lucrative fields be kept low; or if the women insist upon "more creative work," (2) the salaries of female doctors and such be not overly generous, as in the Soviet Union, where most doctors are now women. The alternative, given both male and female mating predilections, is masses of bright, wealthy, unmarried women.

"Comparable pay for comparable work" spells disaster as long as the male organism is constituted anything like the way it is today. The man, in most cases, feels he must serve as the chief "provider," which gives him an essential psychological boost -- in which case the women will still be doing just as well materially. Maybe at times it's all just a nice "fiction," but it keeps the sexes happy and together. If women begin earning nearly as much as men (which means that many will earn more), an even greater number of men will withdraw from women to preserve their feelings of dominance -- feelings which, their instincts tell them every day, are necessary for male health and longevity.

Brainless Bruisers

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) is beginning to have doubts about Proposition 48, which was passed at its 1983 convention. Scheduled to take effect on August 1, 1986, the proposition requires incoming freshmen athletes to score a minimum of 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) and to have a 2.0 high-school grade-point average in a "core curriculum" of 11 academic courses. Failing to meet either standard, students must sit out athletics during their freshman year.

The range of SAT scores is 400 to 1600, so the athlete who makes 1000 on the SAT has statistically done twice as well as the one who makes a 700. But since the entire test is "multiple choice," it is hard to fathom how anyone could make much below a 700. Even hardened cynics are shocked to learn that the average SAT score for all the black males on athletic scholarships in America has consistently been in the high-600s range. The average for white male athletes has been in the mid-900s.

The NCAA is beginning to panic because a $200,000 survey of 16,000 athletes, just released, shows that three-fourths of the black football players and six-sevenths of the black basketballers who, in 1982, received athletic scholarships at the nation's leading colleges and universities, would now be ineligible for freshman-year play. (So would a significant minority of white athletes.)

In the past, scholarship athletes have gotten around the stupidity problem by taking ultra-light course loads during their freshman year, which, if continued, would require six years for graduation. The reformers want to have the jocks studying instead of playing ball during that critical first year.

Sadly, it looks like the NCAA Council will be modifying Proposition 48 at its convention in January. For a brief moment, some of us had antique visions of handsome white scholar-athletes dancing in our heads.

Cholly Bilderberger

The NYPD is still searching the city's sewer system for Olive Garrity, the anthropologist who was shoved into an open manhole near Lincoln Center over a year ago. The shovers were fellow scientists angered by what they called her "malicious pleasure in denigrating Margaret Mead." Lieutenant Klaus O'Janovic of the NYPD has been in charge of the case from the start, and reports that his men haven't given up hope. "We think we hear her every so often," he says, "and we keep finding pages torn from the manuscript of the book she was writing about this Margaret Snead." An aide corrected him, and he said, with a deprecatory smile, "I mean Mead. Anyhow, we've come to the conclusion that maybe she's avoiding us. And with good reason, because if we find her she'll have to face the charges that have been filed against her." Columbia University is the plaintiff in the case, which is backed by six ad hoc committees, a petition with 3,406 signatures of prominent anthropologists from universities across the country and around the world, and several full-page ads in the New York Times. Spokesdwarf Solipshe Sheetznep, the dynamic 3' 9 13/32" head of the Metropolitan Universities and Colleges Informational and Action Arm of Greater New York, is his usual direct self when he says, "If she comes out of that sewer, she'll wish she didn't when she finds out what we have in store for her." Despite the inability of the Sewer Task Force to find Ms. Garrity, Lieutenant O'Janovic reports that much else has been turned up. "I guess what they call evolution is really speeded up down there, because you've got an animal that looks like a cross between a beaver and a llama. The beaver part can build dams — and I mean big dams — and the llama part, with its long neck, can get air under the manholes when the conduits fill. Then you've got another animal about as big as a baby dolphin that can swim everywhere, and it's also got webbed feet like a duck for walking in the ooze when the flow is down. The wild dogs and the baboons have mated or something in certain areas, and that makes for a hell of an animal. Of course, the main wildlife you see down there are those rats that are as big as basset hounds, and they don't crossbreed or evolve so much except that some of them are getting an outside layer of flexible plates like an armadillo, so how do we know how that happened? Come to think of it, maybe this Olive Garrity, because she's an anthropologist, is staying down there for scientific reasons."

Latest addition to the Outdoor Racist's Gallery: in Istamboul, Mississippi, a collection of statues put up by blacks to draw the world's attention to "racists in literature who are not usually thought of that way" is Henry James. Omerine Frannola, chief spokeswoman for the Gallery, explains his selection: "This man who white dilettantes and people of pretension and income who have their own way paid for from birth and are used to good sheets and never no way have had to cope with oversized cockroaches . . . this man who white people like that are always reading about and saying, 'Oh, ain't it so Cloud 9 that this Big Man Mr. Henry James wrote all those delicate little goodies for us, oh, we be lapping them up like greens and caviar on Saturday night!', when the truth is that they are reading racism and not knowing it. Or maybe a lot worse, knowing it and not caring But how can they ignore it? This writer does not have one black character in all his books!! And we know that is the worst sort of racism because it is racism by omission. It is making blacks invisible, which goes against sense and optical science and just plain eyesight. If we are not visible, what is? Is not black a color? If anything, it is whites who are invisible because white is a color without much to it. You'd think some white would have noticed this flaw in Mr. James's work, but no one has. They just keep reading about this world without blacks and think it's some kind of normal. Mr. Henry James is the worst." Caroline Plimpton represents the Gallery in New York and, as usual, she went down to Istamboul (located not too far from Oxford, Mississippi) for the unveiling of Henry's statue, and sent this report: "First of all, you have to get the flavor of Istamboul, a very sleepy little Mississippi town, not greatly changed over the years, 83% black. And this is black black, splendidly thick lips, attractively agape mouths, fabulously long canine teeth, old clothes, straw hats . . . the place is definitely not crawling with Andy Youngs. Of course, the Gallery crowd is a bit different. Omerine, very earnest, looks a bit like Cicely Tyson and is quite nice behind all her Church of the Risen and Fallen African Christ of Formerday Sinners syntax and vocabulary, as are the rest of the Gallery brass. Anyhow, the breathing heart of Istamboul is Martin Luther King Jr. Square, facing the turgid Ikoyassakkomassa River, and home of the Outdoor Racist's Galery. Here stand the (until now) hidden racists of white literature, now joined by the sainted Henry. His statue is composed of old tires, so that he looks like the Michelin man, but rougher. The head, I am told proudly, was drenched in gasoline and then set afire, so that the rubber sort of ran together, creating a great blob of lava-like stuff, into which crude features — lips, nose, eyes, what-have-you — made of painted wood have been set. Amazingly enough, it does convey the feeling of James — rather heavy, portentous, with a touch of Roman emperor in the jowls — and is topped off with a sensational headgear made in what Omerine calls the 'hombberger style of hate.' On a sheet of plywood leaning against the statue — really not an adequate word for this artifact, but what else is there? — is painted, in extremely amateurish fashion: 'Henry James, bon vivanting racist and novelist and latterday band leader. Concealed his message of bigotry in long sentences and big books, but did not fool all of the people some of the time. Just some of the people all of the time and none of the black brotherhood none of the time. Rest in hell with your head cradled in the Devil's hot arms and forced to listen to your own works read to you forever in a foreign language by a retarded honky kid with a cleft palate.' I brought down a couple of people from the Museum of Modern Art with me, and they're beside themselves. Would like to mount the Gallery as a show, and put several statues in the permanent collection. Would like to move the whole town of Istamboul to New York and make it a rival museum of MOMA. Must run -- Omerine and I are having lunch at the Soul Soda Shop. Frightful place filled with flies and hideous dogs, and everything — even the ice cream cones — tastes of chitlins and fatback. But Omerine has promised to explain Virginia Woolf (yet another racist!) to me, and I can't resist the prospect."

In town: Baron Klaus von Leinsdorf, founder and head of Dunkelster Afrika KG [Darkest Africa, Inc.], which he calls, "the ultimate in tour companies. We provide relaxation for German men and women who like to get away from Germany for pleasure in a warmer climate." The Baron established Dunkelster Afrika some ten years ago, but had been thinking about it for a long time. "I always knew that German men and women were strongly attracted by Africa, but I didn't know how to capitalize on that fondness." Dunkelster packages the tour: flight from any of several West German cities direct to Mombassa, Dar-Es-Salaam, Nairobi and other African cities; three-, five- and seven-day stays at "fairly comfortable hotels"; unlimited and prepaid access to African women, and men. "There is just something about blacks that Germans need," the Baron explains. "The German works too hard, he can't unwind sufficiently with his own kind. He needs the exotic, the foreign, the forbidden, strange odors, abasement, 'the whole trip,' as you say. I put him back in Stuttgart or Bremen refreshed, rested and ready for business and social and family life again." The Baron says that men were his only customers for years. "Then some women who knew where their husbands were going came to me and asked, 'Aren't you forgetting us?' Now, women make up 38.71% of our customers." The Baron has had no problems at the African end. "Oh, my no. Those governments have such unemployment that they are most happy to put their young people to work." The Baron also feels he is doing a great — and poetic — service for his country. "When I see our planes taking off — by the hundreds now — on a weekend, I am reminded of the old days I spent in the Luftwaffe when our hearts were stirred by far less planes, if the truth be known, flying against England and other targets at dawn. But then we were flying for war, and now we fly for peace. And pleasure, of course."

Our Man in Washington reports that the ultrasecret Forrestal-Lenin Policy Implementation Committee is working closely with the administration to ensure the smooth flow of at least 5 million immigrants per year into the United States. "This includes the illegals as well as the legals," according to a topsecret Committee directive. The program is bipartisan, and has the strong if covert support of leaders in both parties. "We have to be seen worldwide as the good guys," according to the directive, "if we are to enjoy an effective propaganda program contra the Russians, whom we cast as the bad guys. To earn and wear our white hats it is essential that we are always lending a helping hand to the less fortunate guys. And with our delicately balanced policies in Central and South America, we must not take any steps to upset the perceived line of thinking and leaders and people in those countries. Also, we need several million new spenders per year to keep our internal economy operating smoothly and our GNP maintained in an upward tilt."

We were the first column in the country to call attention to a shop in Boston called Conspiracy, Inc., set up, according to its catalog, "to serve all your paranoid needs." We are now happy to report that Conspiracy, Inc., has a growing string of franchises across the country. "We are very big with Birchers and other right-wingers," reports Betty Hargreaves, head of PR. "And, of course, we can tailor conspiracies to fit any preconceptions. We can, for instance, combine a conspiracy whereby the Council on Foreign Relations runs the country with a conspiracy in which the Communists have already taken over. We can blend sell-out at Yalta with buyout via the Marshall Plan. We can place Lenin in secret negotiations with Woodrow Wilson in Princeton in 1916 (he came by Italian submarine), and Franklin Roosevelt in Moscow in 1941 (spirited there in a British bomber) for a conference with Stalin. We can show how China was betrayed as early as 1905 (by the Secret Cabal of New York's 400, headed by Ward McAllister), and how powerful forces were out to smear General Douglas MacArthur before World War II. We can offer convincing proof that Huey Long was killed by the FBI because J. Edgar Hoover was working with Harry Bridges for control of the Mafia; and that Jack Kennedy was killed by his brothers because he didn't want any of them to follow him as president. We are able to produce documents showing that the media savages Charles Lindbergh because he had spurned Eleanor Roosevelt's advances; and that Churchill instigated World War II because Goering had spurned his advances. When you come right down to it, there's nothing we can't prove. Of course, we won't touch conspiracies based on race or color, but other than that anything is possible."

Correction: In the October 1984 column, Sam Bowie Crockett Johnson was identified as "the Texas billionaire and self-styled 'He-coon racist of the entire Southwest.'" The description is of Sam's father, Jerold (Alamo) Jackson. Sam himself is quite different, as could be seen in the rest of the item, which detailed activities on his part that would be foreign to his father. Or that we think would be foreign.

Notes from the Sceptred Isle - John Nobull

The merits of Carroll Quigley's Tragedy and Hope are by no means confined to his Round Table revelations. I regard his book as a masterly summing up of the liberal position as it was in the 1960s, before liberals lost the initiative in the battle for the Western mind. Oh, to be sure, their ethos still controls the media, but the liberals' supply of original ideas has run out. All they can do now is prevent our ideas from being disseminated. Historically, this is a weak position to be in, however strong it still may seem.

In one fundamental respect Quigley is dishonest. He deliberately plays down the role of the Jews, and in this way makes much of recent history unintelligible. For example, he notes that an optimistic and scientific outlook, prevailing between 1860 and 1890, gave way to a more pessimistic and irrationalist point of view in the following period, the key figures of which were Freud, Sorel, Bergson and Proust (and, he might have added, Max Nordau). What he does not say is that of these only Sorel was a non-Jew, and his attitudes were extremely ambivalent. He may have admired Lenin, but he did much to inspire Mussolini's syndicalist ideas.

Quigley is also somewhat muddled as regards political democracy, which rests, he says, on the following basis: (1) that men are relatively equal in their ability to understand and use power (which is obviously nonsense); (2) that they have relatively equal access to the information needed to make government decisions (such a claim being laughable in America and Britain); and (3) that men have a psychological readiness to accept majority rule in return for those civil rights which will allow any minority to built itself up to become a majority. This last point is crucial. It means that any minority may so strengthen its sense of cohesion that it may become the majority in time, but that the majority has no right to defend itself against this process by the same means. Enter Wilmot Robertson.

Quigley was a weapons expert, and this gives an interesting twist to his historical approach. For example, he tells us that Third World governments are able to oppress their peoples because the latter are poor, and only the former can afford weapons. He might have added that in Switzerland sophisticated modern weapons are kept in private houses by the soldier-civilians. The contrast is stark.

Quigley makes a direct equation between the growth of democracy ("representative government" would have been a more accurate expression) and the availability of weapons to ordinary folk. That was certainly the case in the American colonies during the 1770s, and Americans should make sure that it remains the case in the America of the 1980s. Again, Quigley draws a parallel between the ready availability of weapons in the Age of Pericles and in the 19th century, contrasting it with the military specialisation of the Middle Ages. However, I would point to the victories of the relatively amateur English bowmen over the professional crossbowmen of Genoa (so prominent in the French armies). Also, it was not until towards the end of the 19th century that easy access to weapons was able to offset the large-scale armies which had originated at the time of the French Revolution. Quigley recounts how 40,000 Boers held off ten times that number of British for three years. Right up to 1914, inflexibility in the matter of battle plans made mobilisation tantamount to a declaration of war (because big military movements initiated on one side of a frontier could only be "handled" by a similar response on the other side). Thus Quigley refers to "Russia's mobilisation which had precipitated the war" in that year. So much for the theory of Germany's sole responsibility.

Quigley's analysis of World War I not only benefits from his practical interest in weaponry, strategy and tactics, but also from his knowledge of behind-the-scenes decisions of the higher-ups. Again and again he is able to shed interesting sidelights on the issues. Take this sentence: "On August 4th [1914] Britain declared war on Germany, emphasising the iniquity of her attack on Belgium, although in the Cabinet meeting of July 29th it had been agreed that such an attack would not legally obligate Britain to go to war." The real reason, of course, was Britain's traditional stance in favour of a balance of power on the Continent, which would have been upset by the defeat of France, now that Germany was so much stronger than in 1871.

Quigley comes to the conclusion that, on balance, there were more violations of international law by the Entente (France, Britain and Russia) than by the Central Powers. Especially interesting is the sinking of the Lusitania, which took place on May 7th, 1915, but was used as a casus belli by President Wilson two years later. Not only was the ship carrying guns and ammunition, which made it a legitimate military target, but the percentage of Americans on board was 15.6%, not four-fifths, as claimed in the London Times. The greatest violation of international law was the continuation of the Allied blockade of Germany for nine months after the Armistice, which led to the deaths of 800,000 defenceless Germans by starvation, while 108,000 horses, 205,000 cattle, 426,000 sheep and 240,000 fowls were taken in reparations. To be sure, Quigley claims that the Treaty of Versailles was "more lenient than would have resulted from a German victory," but neither in 1871, 1917 nor 1940, when the Germans were triumphant, did they show anything like so much hostility towards the vanquished. Still, in dealing with the 1914-18 war, Quigley shows a balanced judgement. He records, for example, that the Balfour Declaration only provided a "home" for the Jews in Palestine, not a state.

Quigley's observations on the interwar period continue to be interesting. Thus he emphasises the cruelty of the occupation of the Ruhr, which was hardly diminished by the fact that some Germans participated in the oppression and killing of their fellow countrymen. One point Quigley does make, however, is that the provisions of the Treaty of Versailles, which were intended to ruin Germany, had in some ways a contrary effect (as Keynes had predicted). The Germans were able to borrow almost unlimited sums from the United States, so that almost every village in Germany eventually boasted not only a post office but a swimming-pool. In 1932, when German war debt was hastily cut, Allied debt was not cut, so that England, also heavily indebted, continued to suffer the full effects of her war borrowing.

As an incidental detail, Quigley tells us that the Weimar flag was symbolic: gold for the Jews, red for socialists, and black for the Church. No wonder a flag with the same colours was reimposed on Germany after the Second World War! We are also told that the Reichstag fire plotters were homosexuals, and had a "degenerate moron" called Van der Lubbe with them. But the author tries to cover himself by saying that the circumstances are "still mysterious" and by definitely implying that the Nazis were really responsible.

Quigley refers to the Nazi Party as "an aggregation of gangsters, neurotics, mercenaries, psychopaths, and merely discontented, with a small minority of idealists." It is therefore extremely significant when he tells us that National Socialism (which he describes in great detail) was not totalitarian but only authoritarian, thus giving the lie to the old chestnut that there was nothing to choose between Nazism and Communism -- a line which was understandably effective after the Nazi-Soviet Pact. In addition, there is the following bald and incontrovertible statement: "Hitler demonstrated that his policies could bring prosperity to Germany."

With regard to Austrians, it is worth remembering that the name they chose for the rump of their empire was "German Austria," though this name was expressly forbidden by the Allies, as was also the much desired Anschluss with Germany. All subsequent political developments can only be seen as substitutes for what the Austrians had clearly and openly preferred. It is interesting that in the Carinthian plebiscite, the population of Klagenfurt, which was 68% Slovene, voted only 40% in favour of joining Yugoslavia. The Slovenes, who were Germanicised to a large extent by the Vandals, had -- and still have -- more in common with the Austrians than with the Serbs. (Even their language has over 600 words of Germanic origin.) Quigley describes the Austrian country people (so much more attractive than the Viennese) as "ignorant, intolerant, belligerent and backward." He then goes on to admit that the socialists succeeded in building almost 60,000 dwellings in Vienna without any of the usual Viennese financial skulduggery.

Where Czechoslovakia is concerned, it is worth remembering Quigley's remark that it was an "artificial" state, its population comprising 6 million Czechs, 3 million Slovaks, 3.4 million Germans, 750,000 Hungarians, 300,000 Ruthenians and 100,000 Poles. It was hardly an ancient nation that Hitler dissolved in 1938.

Quigley is predictably anti-fascist where Italy is concerned, but makes the valid point that Mussolini, for reasons of prestige, fixed the value of the lira too high, so that Italian trade stagnated. He might also have referred to the cardinal German economic error, brought out by Goering at Nuremberg: Nazis fixed food prices so low during the war that farmers failed to produce what they could have produced in a free market, and people went hungry on account of the well-meant price controls.

Apropos the Spanish Civil War, Quigley asserts that it is difficult to make an objective study without becoming open to abuse from both sides. However, he does not explain just who would have dared to accuse him of being biased against Franco at the time of writing. Clearly, this is a reference to the orchestrated, artificial outrage of one side only. It is also amusing to detect the obvious bias when he refers to the Communists as ready both to "eliminate" revolutionaries of the left and "exterminate" the reactionaries of the right.

His section on India is prefixed with what amounts to a defence of the British record. He points out that thuggee, infanticide, temple prostitution and child marriage were all suppressed by the British, and that in 1858 only 1% of the population could read, a situation which soon changed under direct British control (as opposed to that of the East India Company). The charge he might have made -- that British humanitarianism was responsible for an enormous increase in population, which could not be maintained by the economy -- is inconceivable to a liberal mind. But even St. Gandhi, a latter-day Rousseau in diapers, is brought to task for his hypocrisy. He "never seemed to recognise that his fasting and non-violent civil disobedience were effective against the British in India and South Africa only to the degree that the British had the qualities of humanity, decency, generosity, and fair play which he most admired [and] that by attacking the British through these virtues he was weakening Britain and the class which possessed these virtues and making it more likely that they would be replaced by nations and leaders that did not have these virtues." As Gandhi himself said: "I fasted to reform those who loved me" -- and Quigley comments, "You cannot fast against a tyrant." Quigley mentions in passing the 379 people killed by General Dyer at Amritsar in 1919, a figure that has now been eclipsed by the death toll of over 1,000 killed in the same city by the troops of the late Mrs. Gandhi (no relation). Quigley also makes it clear that Gandhi was against the use of Western languages, yet made constant use of English, was against Western medicine, yet engaged a Western surgeon to remove his appendix, was against Western technology, yet allowed hand-woven cloth to be sewn on Singer sewing machines, was against war and violence, yet countenanced the excesses of his rioting followers. In one sense, he was like the League of Nations, which outlawed war, with the result that nations began to wage war without declaring it, and without observing the terms of the Geneva Convention.

One judgement of Quigley in favour of the African natives, both in Kenya and South Africa, strikes me as worthy of record. They left their reserves, not merely because these were inadequate to support their growing population (given their subsistence farming methods) but because the imposition of land taxes forced them to obtain the white man's money in the only way they could -- by competing with the white working class.

Did any Instaurationists catch the Southern Governors' Conference on PBS? What a sorry symposium! Here are some of the choice mouthings from the attendees which, in addition to state bosses, included such political jetsetters as Andrew Young, Commissar of Atlanta, Haynes Johnson of the Washington Post and Vernon Jordan, the blonde-chasing head of the Urban League.

MARK WHITE (Texas): "Civil rights" is the "number one agenda item for today's Southern governors."

Lamar Alexander

LAMAR ALEXANDER (Tennessee, one of the two Republican governors): "[N]ot court orders, but education, is the solution." Republican-appointed federal judges, like Tuttle and Wisdom, were "almost more responsible for the civil rights [revolution] than anyone else." "Carter carried the Confederate counties [in Tennessee in 1980], Reagan carried the Union area -- [while] Carter got nearly all the blacks . . . Republicans and blacks in the South haven't worked well together . . . [Howard] Baker and I . . . were Republicans because of the Union." "Quality education" and "more black role models" would solve the race problem.

BOB GRAHAM (Florida): The Sunshine State's tougher standards for high-school graduation are "not racist" in intent. The black problem in Florida is due to the "lack of a black middle class . . . up until the 1950s." "I'm very impressed with what's happening in Atlanta."

CHARLES ROBB (Virginia): "White, Anglo-Saxon Protestant males" should not be selected for any position "merely because they are the best qualified." We must be careful about "eradicating the traditional all-black colleges" [while integrating all-white colleges].

Charles Robb

ANDREW YOUNG: Eisenhower's judges "had the finest record" and it was "one of the ironies" that GOP appointees "made possible the civil rights progress." In Georgia "almost nobody can get elected if they appeal to only one group." Polarization, thanks to Reagan, is "not so much racial but economic." "A nice, Anglo-Saxon mindset" is favored by the racist academicians. We need "integration at the administrative and decision-making level . . . Integration should also be pre-kindergarten." "Cultural integration" is the next step in civil rights. "I think the South is far ahead of the rest of the country." "Integrate the money . . . the access to capital . . . use the power of the state to make sure private banks make loans available."

VERNON JORDAN: "I am for busing any way it takes to do it." Busing is "indispensable" to civil rights along with "goals and guidelines and timetables." "We do want to maintain our all-black schools."

MARTHA COLLINS (Kentucky, the one female governor): I want "goals" with "definite dates."

DICK RILEY (South Carolina): Jesse Jackson's campaign had been "very positive."

JOE FRANK HARRIS (Georgia): Federal funds are "inadequate." "I didn't need to talk very much [for Georgia] since Andy Young was doing such a great job of it."

Public television paid Seymour M. Hersh, the former star reporter of the New York Times, a large sum to produce a one-hour documentary for its "Frontline" series this fall. The subject: systematic Israeli penetration of the U.S. Defense Department. Hersh soon realized that he was onto an illegal cover-up far larger than anything seen in his days investigating Watergate, Vietnam and the CIA. A Capitol Hill source close to The Spotlight, who served as one of Hersh's guides across the murky Pentagon terrain, reported having heard Hersh exclaim one day over lunch; "This is dynamite. It's satanic stuff." Other sources confirmed the story.

Hersh quickly ran up against a stone wall of fear. Almost everyone he spoke to provided his quota of dirt on the subject of Israeli-American dual loyalists in high places, yet almost no one wished to be quoted "for the record." A rare exception was Michael Saba, whose new book, The Armageddon Network, highly touted by former Congressman Paul Findley, deals with the espionage activities of men like Stephen D. Bryen, whom President Reagan appointed to a top Defense Department post after the well-documented exposure of his duplicity. Published in November by Amana Books, Saba's opus is available in paperback for $9.95 from Liberty Lobby, 300 Independence

Ave., S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003.

The final blow for Hersh -- and the American people -- came in early September when PBS succumbed to unprecedented pressure from the Israeli lobby and killed what would have been the blockbuster program of its fall season.

What the PBS audience got was Abba Eban with his lavishly laundered version of what Jews have been up to for 3,000 years. What the PBS audience didn't get was Seymour Hersh with his frank portrayal of what Jews are up to right now.

Talking Numbers

Some 10 million Soviet citizens died in the first seven years of Stalin's rule (1929-1936) as a result of the forced collectivization of agriculture and the "elimination of classes." In 1937-38, the era of the Great Purge, some 1.4 million (plus or minus 0.2 million), most of them Communist Party members and bureaucrats, were liquidated. In 1939-40, in the continuation of the Purge, which now reached into the Army, and including the death toll in the war against Finland, 1.8 million (plus or minus 0.2 million) Soviet citizens died. In World War II and its aftermath (1941-50), 30 million (plus or minus 0.2 million) died -- 20 million in battle, 10 million in the Gulags and as a result of malnutrition and other forms of deprivation. In 1950-54 (Stalin died in 1953) some 450,000 (plus or minus 150,000) expired in slave labor camps. These figures are taken from a 46-page samisdat by Josef Dyadkin, a Soviet geophysicist. Altogether he estimates that from 43 to 52 million died in the USSR from unnatural causes during the reign of Joseph Stalin.

Nearly 8 million men in America live alone -- twice as many as in 1970. In 1982 almost 12% of women and 17% of men, aged 30-34, had never married.

A spot inspection of cargo at Port Everglades in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, late last year turned up a cache of 12,000 used rifles stacked in huge shipping containers. The unregistered weapons, with a resale value of nearly $1 million, were in transit from Eagle, Ltd., of Ashdod, Israel, to Shiran Environment, Trade and Service of Santo Damos, Guatemala. The involvement of two foreign firms made the likelihood of arrests "pretty slim," according to special customs agent Leon Guinn. Hopefully, spot checks of Israeli vessels will now be less spotty.

Alcoholics are estimated to comprise 8-10% of the American population. The figure is 14-16% for blacks, who suffer from cirrhosis of the liver at a rate 12 times higher than non-blacks. Fifth of the top 10 causes of Indian deaths is alcoholism. Hispanic males are "second only to American Indians in alcohol-related problems," states the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. About one-third of all homos in urban areas are alcoholics; about 25-30% of all lesbians.

Among the "Other" are several businesses owned by Hasidic Jews. Japanese and Chinese (Asians) are some of the most affluent American population groups, and Jews are the most affluent. Hitchhiker Daniel Henning was shot to death by brothers BARRY and WILLIAM CALHOUN in October 1980, one of three victims of similar incidents in Baltimore County, Maryland, at about that time. In a decision last March, the Maryland Court of Appeals ruled six to one that Barry Calhoun must be released from his sentence of life plus 20 years, and may not be retried, because Maryland law requires that defendants be brought to trial within 180 days of their arraignments, and his prosecutors missed the deadline.

At the founding conference of the John Birch Society in the 1950s, the distinguished white Gentiles on hand privately agreed, without significant dissent, that the Jewish minority group lay at the bottom of many of America's gravest problems. Yet it wasn't long before those Birchers who were willing to speak publicly about the Jewish problem were driven from the organization, while Jewish dual-loyalists were hired as some of its leading spokesmen. One of these was ALAN STANG, who recently characterized the mestizo hordes overrunning our Southwest as "a new conservative force among us." Here is a part of what Stang had to tell his rich-little-old-ladies audience about subversion, in American Opinion magazine:

More than two-thirds of the kindergarten children in Los Angeles now have Spanish names. This inevitably will transform our nation, a change that might not be as bad as you think. After all, the gringos have mucked our country up something fierce, haven't they? The conspiracy of support for world Communism coming out of our money centers is gringo from its Sassoon hairdo to the tips of its Gucci shoes. Fresh resistance to the old guard could be just what we need.

Stang went on to explain that the wettest wetbacks are often "more patriotic" than the most unhyphenated of old-stock Americans.

Last January, MRS. MICHELLE MELECIO asked the city council of Santa Ana, California, to help her drive drug dealers and prostitutes out of her neighborhood. She eventually became the leader of a local community patrol group, and provided police with information leading to several arrests. On July 23, Mrs. Melecio and her husband BERNABE were arrested and charged with having sold undercover officers heroin and cocaine on six occasions. Apparently she had been trying to eliminate her competition.

ANTHONY ALVARADO, the "charismatic" chancellor of the nation's largest school system, has recently been embroiled in an ugly financial scandal. So the New York Daily News decided to investigate his professional past. It was easily determined that Alvarado's "spectacular" record as superintendent of East Harlem's School District 4 was largely faked. For example, in 1979, only 17% of the students at Junior High School 99 were reading at grade level: by 1983, 65% were. The infinitely stupid and/or venal press persists in reporting such impossible "miracles" as truth; it happens in every major city. In this case, the true truth was that the test scores of about 300 elite students from outside the district were improperly transferred to JHS 99 and other local schools.

Chicago mayor HAROLD WASHINGTON says he "looked all over the country" for someone to be his cultural affairs commissioner. He came up with FRED FINE, who, after four years on the lam, was convicted in 1956 of advocating the violent overthrow of the U.S. government and its replacement with Leninism. But the conviction was later overturned because of an Earl Warren Supreme Court ruling that such teachings are not illegal unless it can be proven that the defendant urged immediate action. "First-rate individual," said Hiz-zoner of Fine. "Best of breed . . . the finest for the job."

When Drysdale Securities Corporation collapsed in 1982, financial institutions and individual investors lost more than $300 million in the ensuing Wall Street crisis. Behind the bust was JOSEPH OSSORIO, owner and chairman of Drysdale, who "looted and ultimately ruined" the company in a series of frauds. In eight years, Drysdale's overseas customers were bilked and milked out of $10 million to help pay for Ossorio's spectacular lifestyle. Federal judge MORRIS LASKER let the bum off with an eight-year sentence, but he faces up to 18 more on additional charges.

SIDNEY EMRICH and JOE WANDER of Manhattan were led away in handcuffs last April 24, fingered as the ringleaders of an enormous scam which sold worthless Alaskan oil leases to naive investors. Holdings which federal reports had identified as oilless, and whose leases consequently went for $1 per acre on the government market, were subleased by Emrich and his eight fast-talking cronies at exorbitant rates.

Larry Baugh of Irving, Texas, is no admirer of TV evangelist JIMMY SWAGGART. His mother, Ida, 70, was stabbed repeatedly in the face last December 10 with a pair of scissors, and died two days later without regaining consciousness. The culprit was housekeeper JACQUELINE EUNA WARREN (race unspecified), who had been hired at the recommendation of two Swaggart representatives. A few days later Ida Baugh's husband Maurice understandably succumbed to his heart ailment. All that Larry Baugh had left was his parents' will. But no, those same Swaggart emissaries, GERALD JOHNSON and MARIO SCORZZA, had also persuaded the senior Baughs to change their will, and Larry was eventually forced to settle for a pittance.

"Don't hurt me any more," pleaded 65-year-old Columbia University law professor Wolfgang Friedman, as three black punks kept stabbing away at him. He finally expired, and STEVE ROBINSON pleaded guilty. Now, barely a decade later, Robinson is making $21,000 per year as a counselor at the prison on New York's Riker's Island. His brother, QUASLIM INHAM, makes $67,000 per year as a warden, and Inham's wife, EVERLYN BRIDGES, with a felony record herself, makes $37,000 per year as an assistant commissioner. All three work in the same department. But another brother of Robinson's, DAVID, who helped him slice up Prof. Friedman, has yet to cash in on his family connections.

Minneapolis has a new and highly artificial black elite, which has experienced some difficulty in surrendering its folkways. Take the case of LAWRENCE LEE LAMBKINS. His former sister-in-law, Pamela Alexander, is a municipal judge, while his live-in girlfriend, O.J. SILAS, is director of the Hennepin County Affirmative Action office. Lambkins embarrassed both women last spring when Judge Alexander's bracelet and gold ring turned up on the hands of two "equal employment specialists" in Silas's office. Lambkins had recently pilfered $15,500 in goods from the Alexander home, and hawked his hot merchandise among some of the brothers and sisters who staff the Twin Cities' "human betterment industry."

ERIC WASHINGTON, who once played pro football for the Cardinals, was named in 1975 to head the St. Louis Area Business Management Fellowship Program for the National Alliance of Businessmen. More recently, he gave up public relations for bank robbery. When the FBI showed up at his home earlier this year, he barricaded the door and shot himself.

The number of black athletes around the country who have been guilty of sexual crimes is reminiscent of an AIDS body count. The worst of the entire lot may be THOMAS (HOLLYWOOD) HENDERSON, who starred on the Dallas Cowboys' Super Bowl teams of 1976, '78 and '79. Henderson recently pleaded no contest to four charges stemming from an incident last November in which he forced a teen-aged quadriplegic and another girl to have sex with him. After the gunpoint assault, he drugged the pair, and later offered a $10,000 bribe to stop them from testifying.

What should be done with DANIEL YOUNG, the Negro who drove his car onto a crowded Los Angeles sidewalk on the eve of the Olympic Games, killing one and injuring 53? A life sentence? The electric chair? Mrs. Irwin Deutsch, the aunt of Eileen, the 15-year-old girl who died under Young's wheels, goes a step further. "The death penalty isn't enough. They should bring back torture." Paradoxical words from a member of the race which bears much of the responsibility for the elimination of capital punishment and for the indoctrination of hatred and revenge into the heads of the likes of Young.

Chief of the legal staff of the Mondale-Ferraro vote-begging caravan was DAVID IFSHIN, who visited Hanoi at the invitation of the Vietnamese Reds in the early 1970s, where he signed the famous "Peoples' Peace Treaty," which made very good propaganda for Uncle Ho's boys. Ezra Pound was put in an iron cage in Pisa and a loony bin in Washington for aiding and abetting a country with which the U.S. was at war. Ifshin was rewarded with a high post in Fritz's fizzling campaign.

Sandra Crane, a pretty blonde secretary for a Wall Street brokerage firm, who was engaged and about to be married, made the mistake of riding in the cab of IVEN WICKHAM. The 56-year-old black man pursued her after she left his cab and knocked her down on the sidewalk, knocked her so hard she suffered a fractured skull and died. "Nothing racial," one gathered from press accounts.

Appreciative homosexuals staged a male strip-show benefit for Democratic Senate candidate LLOYD DOGGETT in San Antonio late last summer. More than $350 was raised amid delirious cries of "take it off." The liberal Doggett elected to return the money, but still lost the election to Democrat-turned-Republican Phil Gramm -- whose wife is Oriental.

Conservative fundraiser ALAN GOTTLIEB, now serving a one-year sentence for tax-dodging in a Washington state jail, is being sued by seven former employees of his Second Amendment Foundation, one of the largest pro-gun groups, for diverting the foundation's money to his personal use. Gottlieb still heads the Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms and the Center for the Defense of Free Enterprise, both of which organizations he will no doubt continue to use to chivy more money out of naive rightwingers. While in durance vile, the conservative con artist is drawing a $24,000 annual salary from the Second Amendment Foundation.

A bunch of DISSIDENTS from Soviet Georgia have been arrested for a massive counterfeiting scam in Brooklyn and Israel. They had already printed $13 million in bogus bills and had enough paper to print $100 million more. All the culprits were Jews, though this was omitted in the wire service reports. The Jewish identification is seldom mentioned when Soviet refuseniks do bad things, but frequently mentioned on the rare occasions they do good things.

CARMEN PEREZ is a perfect symbol of the modern Democratic Party, which explicitly rewards alien law-breakers while implicitly penalizing the nation's law-abiding "old stock" by denying it a future existence. Carmen was the woman who led the Democratic convention delegates in reciting the Pledge of Allegiance. Pinned to her dress was a yellow corsage bearing a message from her 10 brothers and sisters: "This is the reason our mother swam across the river." Her mother, MARIA ORNELAS, now 89, broke the law 80 years ago by illegally crossing the Rio Grande. One wonders if her grandchildren number in triple digits.

JOHNNY JONES was Dade County's school superintendent until his "unfortunate" conviction for grand theft in 1980. Even more "regrettable" was his crashing his car into a Miami home in November and killing a sleeping six-year-old.

CLEORIA WATTS, 39, was a black Chigaoan with a long record of convictions for assorted rapes, murders, robberies and the like. On September 22, 1983, he was paroled after serving 40% of his latest sentence. Precisely two months later, he was gunned down by police in the streets of suburban Oak Park after he had attacked a couple in their home and dragged the woman naked through the streets. Before he died, he shot a cop in the abdomen.

It's only inevitable that homosexuality would infiltrate religion, especially those faiths whose priests are enjoined to practice celibacy. Accordingly, the sexual preferences of the Catholic priesthood and the occupants of nunneries have always been somewhat suspect. This suspicion came out in the open recently during a flap over a new biography of Cardinal Spellman, the late Archbishop of New York. Some people who knew Spellman think that the allegations in the original draft of The American Pope: The Life and Times of Francis Cardinal Spellman by John Cooney were spurious and dreamed up to pander to liberals and Jews who have never forgiven the Cardinal for his defense of Joe McCarthy, his support of the CIA and FBI, and his attempts to undermine John F. Kennedy's presidential campaign. Two men, however, have stepped forward and claimed to have had separate sexual encounters with Spellman. Editor-in-chief JONATHAN SEGAL of Times Books, the publisher, after having sent out the galleys to newspapers for advance reviews, decided to print the book without the four pages of allegations about the Cardinal's homosexuality. The point had been made -- and the publicity had been reaped.

The ZACCAROS of Queens (the Bunkerland of the late, unlamented Norman Lear sitcom) have publicly identified not with Archie but with Edith. But did Edith have a $400,000 home in the restricted Queens enclave of Forest Hills, which is populated mainly by Jews? Did Edith have a $200,000 condominium in St. Croix in the Virgin Islands? Did Edith have a $195,000 summer retreat on Fire Island on the south shore of Long Guyland? If Edith had borrowed $110,000 illegally from Archie for a political campaign, if Archie had "lifted" money from a trust account and if Edith and Archie had neglected to pay $50,000 in income taxes for several years, they would both probably be languishing in prison, where John and Geraldine are not.

Having seen America's racial composition transformed during her lifetime, Claire Booth Luce finally voiced her profound concern in a magazine interview in 1983. She would have felt "right at home" at the YWCA's Women of the Year ceremony held in Washington last spring. Unable to attend because of illness, Luce missed a chance to be ethnically outnumbered by fellow honorees MARY FRANCES BERRY (black), PATRICIA ROBERTS HARRIS (black) and KATHERINE ORTEGA. The only other Majority member honored was Navy Commodore Grace Murray Hopper, who, at 77, is almost as old as Luce, and right out of The Beverly Hillbillies. The minority choices were, of course, much younger.

Canada. An investigation made by the United Church, Canada's largest Protestant denomination, has revealed that at least half of its younger female employees have been sexually harassed by clergymen or other church officials. The total number of female staff members and female ministers surveyed was 350, and four of the latter reported rapes or attempted rapes.

Most of the sexual botherment came in the milder form of rude or lewd remarks about the women's bodies, touching and pinching, and the like. One woman official in the church speculated that many male clergy resent the growing number of women moving into their traditionally masculine domain and are responding with harassment.

The number of cases of infectious syphilis in Edmonton has been rocketing upward for a year or two. Seventy percent of the male victims picked up the disease from Metis Indian women in the city's Skid Row neighborhood.

As director of Alberta's social hygiene services, Dr. Barbara Romanowski had a clear duty to warn local residents against the Skid Row Indians. So she did -- and the Indian leaders at once began accusing her of "blatant racism."

Richard J. Doyle had a brave column in the Toronto Globe and Mail last July. In noting the one-hundredth anniversary of filmmaker D.W. Griffith's birth, he pondered how Canada's censors would treat his classic work, The Birth of a Nation, today.

"How," Doyle asked, "would Israel Ludwig respond" to a modern version of the film? Ludwig, who is chairman of the race relations committee of a monstrosity called the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, recently told a federal conference in Vancouver that America's historic obsession with freedom of speech for all must not be repeated in Canada.

Noted Doyle: "It [The Birth of a Nation] was sympathetic to the Klan then. And so it remains." (Perhaps he also noted that Woodrow Wilson, who was a liberal historian at Princeton University before becoming President, once said that the film was completely accurate. If so, the editor thoughtfully deleted that portion of his remarks.)

Real freedom is anchored upon knowledge, Doyle concluded. "Lord save us from those who are trying to save us from ourselves." The "salvation" of white Canada is, one might add, a wildly charitable assessment of Israel Ludwig's motives.

More nice Jewish people who "only want to save Canadians" are hard at work in the library racket. Judith Saltman teaches "literature for youth" at the University of British Columbia. She says it is "frightening" that Canadian girls are again reading romantic novels which pass on WASP values from the "insensitive" 1950s. Sheila Egoff, who teaches the same subject at the same institution, is no less worried because boys are reading stuff like Conan the Barbarian, "a pseudo-scientific series about a macho hero who is racist and everything else." She concludes that "it may be better for teenagers to read nothing at all."

Vancouver Sun reporter Douglas Todd, who has mastered all the anti-WASP code words guaranteed to keep him upwardly mobile, supports Saltman's attack on pro-Majority-female easy-reading material: "The squeaky-clean [romantic] plots virtually always end with a Caucasian, middle-class girl united with the boy of her formulaic dreams."

After an intense debate, says Vancouver public librarian Terry Clark, a few token Conan volumes have been allowed onto the shelves. But the authorities would prefer that youngsters return to the "classics" -- great books like J.D. Salinger's squeaky-dirty cult favorite, Catcher in the Rye, which boot-licking reporter Douglas Todd heartily endorses.

Iceland. The American left wing received a good dose of truly subversive sentiments recently:

The reason the Vikings did not get the credit [for individual liberty] is that the nouveau riche [American] founding fathers in their powdered wigs were enamored with Greco-Roman "civilization" even though the Greeks and Romans had been running sleazy feudal fiefdoms for 1,300 years while the Vikings of Iceland and Scandinavia had been practicing elective democracy.

A good argument can be made that the "Cradle of Western Civilization" was not in the patriarchal wastes of Egypt and Mesopotamia, but in the "barbarous" frozen northland where megalithic tombs and Stonehenge were built ages before the dusty pyramids. It is all an amusing revision of history . . .

And the United States . . . [today] is as much as 70% "Viking" (30% from the British Isles not counting Ireland, 15% from Scandinavia, 25% from Poland, Germany and Baltic Russia).

The unlikely source of the preceding was an article about Iceland in the August-September issue of Mother Jones. There, between the usual articles praising the love letters of Emma Goldman and the Ciceronian intimations of Jesse Jackson, was a frank admission by author Steve Chapple that Scandinavian society functions far better, in most respects, than our own. The explanations repeatedly given were three -- small size, ethnic homogeneity, lack of recent immigrants (in the case of Iceland).

Chapple's one grave fault, besides his racial reticence, was frequent lapses into silliness. Apparently, the "man-child" members of the white New Left demand a fundamental lack of seriousness from their writers, and will turn in scorn from any white person who dares to take himself more seriously than Mel Brooks for more than a few paragraphs at a time. Thus, in the quotation cited above, Chapple (or some dopey editor) felt the compulsion to include the sentence, "It is all an amusing revision of history." Why "amusing"? When blacks and Jews bring forth their grievances, it is deadly serious. Is Chapple unaware of the cohorts of white writers and artists who, in this century, have suffered lifelong ignominy because they more forcefully and articulately bore the same message he brings?

But there are far better examples of Chapple's tragic failure to comprehend the full import of things which he has quite casually stumbled onto. At the end of his article, he bemoans the fact that his native Montana is not independent like Iceland, that it will in turn be ravaged like the rest of America before it. "Were we all Icelanders . . ." he sighs. But then he concludes -- quite happily to all appearances -- "We've still got Animal House!" Elsewhere, he writes that his ancestors are "believed to have come from the Galapagos Islands" (which, of course, were uninhabited by man). How's that for pride? He praises America's sorely neglected "Viking heritage," then joshingly asks, "Does this mean we should cultivate (or recultivate) a taste for fermented shark buried in the ground? Fermented shark is a national dish of Iceland."

Really, Steve, when a young American black writes in Mother Jones about his African heritage, does he conclude with throwaway, court-jester lines like that? No, he demands (rightfully) that young blacks be taught about their forebears and "unite to achieve the pan-African destiny" or some other equally positive note. Chapple even states that the very rootlessness of "rapacious immigrants like Rockefeller, Carnegie, Guggenheim and Pullman" is the force which endangers nativist places like Montana today. The answer, it would seem, is roots -- especially for the white Majority.

Just saying that "Iceland is a society that is relatively classless because it was always relatively classless" or noting that in Iceland butchers and filmmakers think and act on the same high level, is not enough. Blacks everywhere relish their "soul," Jews prize their "chosenness." It is obvious that Nordics, when they live in purely Nordic settings, exhibit some marvelous and unique collective traits of their own. According to Chapple:

- Icelanders are great weekend "party hounds," yet there are never fights, never broken bottles, never litter, as in the British Isles, where a feisty element of indigenous Mediterraneans is present.
- Icelandic children "generally know four languages by the time they leave school." Women enjoy a high status -- as they always have. Everyone looks out for one another. "Law" is a Viking word -- and the law here is still respected.
- The women here all "look like they come from the cover of Vogue," as Dan Rather once reported on TV's 60 Minutes. President Vigdis Finnbogadottir looks, says Chapple, "like a Viking Catharine Deneuve."
- Judeo-Christianity never really took root here. Conversion was enforced by the sword (of Norway) about the year 1000, but the native priests always delighted in transgressing the rules of celibacy. Today, the people still lead a healthy, crime-free, guilt-free existence.

It is time for young writers like Steve Chapple to firmly decline the cap-and-bells role when discussing their own people. Nordics are now fighting for their existence on a global scale. Food fights and toga parties led by sleazy, bottle-smashing Albanians like John Belushi will get us exactly where they got John Belushi.

Britain. After the recent reshuffling, Maggie Thatcher's cabinet now includes four Jews. Private Eye noted, "At last we seem to be moving into the 20th century." The newest Jewish cabinet member is David Young, the brother of Stuart Young, who heads up the BBC. David, formerly boss of the Manpower Services Commission, has been appointed to the rarefied but influential post of Privy Counsellor and will soon be ennobled, probably as Lord Young of Stafford. David started out in politics as the flunky of Sir Keith Joseph, the Jewish cabinet minister who is one of Maggie's closest advisers. Before that, Young was the personal assistant of Sir Isaac Wolfson, the Anglo-Jewish department store tycoon. If and when David should quit the political scene, he wants to become a publisher.

Sir Anthony Blunt, the late Soviet spy and fairy esthete, has been celebrated by the British media as a great art expert. It has now been revealed that he used some of this expertise in the art forgery game. In fact, Blunt would certify paintings as genuine when he knew they were fakes. There also seemed to have been some very dubious connections between Blunt, the Surveyor of the Queen's Pictures, and Georges Wildenstein, the millionaire art agent who employed the infamous restorer, Delobré, to "work on" some of his prize paintings.

Positive discrimination is becoming all the rage in Britain -- particularly in the field of education. A new government report issued by Lord Swann called for the teaching of such languages as Creole, Gujarati and Punjabi in British schools, even those in all-white districts. Moreover, math, science and history classes must be offered in Punjabi and Gujarati, as well as English. Also, every school will have to have a course in "positive anti-racism" in its curriculum. Whenever Asian or black teachers are as qualified as whites, the Asians and blacks are to be hired. As in the U.S., racial quotas are recommended to ensure that a sufficient number of minority teachers get degrees in education.

The Irish Project in the North London borough of Islington, funded by the leftist-dominated Greater London Council, has hired three full-time officials who, as National Health Minister Kenneth Clarke puts it, will be largely concerned with "[trying] to stop the population from telling Irish jokes."

Across town, in Brixton, a nursery set up after the riots to "promote racial harmony" has been closed after three black workers and three white workers began rioting among themselves. "Frontline Nursery Brixton," as it is called, saw a steady deterioration in standards between its opening in May 1983 and its closing in April 1984. The last straw came when the three black workers submitted a report to the Lambeth Council's chief social services officer accusing their three white colleagues of "innate racism," which, they claimed, had caused the falling standards. The report, plus a black strike, provoked an angry rebuttal from the majority of parents of children at the nursery. Soon "the atmosphere was so awful we felt it couldn't go on," as one member of the nursery managing committee put it.

"Is it racist to tell the truth?" asked the headline of Lynda Lee-Potter's column for June 13 in the London Daily Mail. She was upset over the fate of Ray Honeyford, the head of an 86%-Asian middle school in the industrial city of Bradford. Honeyford had dared to point out the obvious -- that the quality of education of indigenous white students at his school was being gravely compromised. Soon all the humanitarian activists in the city were affixing long lists of harsh adjectives like "obscene," "disgusting" and "indecent" to the well-meaning Honeyford's name. Max Madden, the Labour Party MP for Bradford West, demanded his sacking. So did the Parents Action Committee, led by a shrill white woman who called for a boycott of the school as well. Columnist Lee-Potter voiced her concern over the "destructive fantasy world we've created," adding:

Mr. Honeyford has merely voiced his fears. He has openly said what is in his mind, and an orchestrated vendetta to crush and intimidate him has been set in motion. It's reminiscent of Orwell's thought police, as we are all increasingly allowing the emotional blackmail to silence common sense. And it's best summed up surely by another Bradford head teacher, Shirley Woodman, who says: "The race lobby is so powerful, decent people can no longer voice decent thoughts."

West Germany. In the Third Reich, one couldn't put a play on the boards that favored Jews. In the Fourth (current) Reich, one cannot produce a play that disfavors them. Even the late, highly lauded Rainer Werner Fassbinder, the mongrel film director and impresario who recently died of a drug overdose, ran into posthumous trouble with his water-closet drama, Garbage, the City and Death. Since one of the chief characters is an unsympathetic Jewish real estate sharpie (in other words, a flesh-and-blood Jew), there was a keening cry of anti-Semitism. Quick as a flash, Ulrich Schwab, the manager of the theater which had dared to put on the play, was canned.

The New York Times Magazine recently ran an article on "Germany's Guest Workers," by Pranay Gupte, adapted from his book, The Crowded Earth: People and the Politics of Population. The most startling statistic was that the number of foreign schoolchildren in West Germany rose from 165,000 in 1976 to nearly 700,000 in 1983. What makes this so startling is that, as Gupte states elsewhere, all recruiting for foreign workers ceased by about 1974. By then, they were no longer wanted, and their total numbers started to level off -- yet the number of their children had scarcely begun its steep rise. Many more offspring can be expected, since "most of the migrants are still in their early-to-middle childbearing years and come from countries where large families are traditional."

Luckily, a major nativist reaction has set in. Heinrich Lummer, the deputy mayor of West Berlin, where one-fourth of the schoolchildren are foreign, says the Turks should not be in Germany at all. "Just imagine," he says, "250,000, or 12% of West Berlin's population, are foreigners . . . If these Turks live here for a long time, Germany will change as a result." He isn't kidding: the streets of Turkish Kreuzberg are "littered with garbage" -- and with idle youth.

Austria. Hitlerian demonology is beginning to rival that of Lucifer in world libraries. The newest and perhaps farthest-out addition to the Führer file is a faded photo purportedly taken by the no longer extant Jewish artist Emma Löwenstamm, which is supposed to show Hitler and Lenin playing chess in Vienna in 1909. To substantiate the claim, a research foundation in Ingolstadt, Austria, points out that Hitler, a down-and-out, 20-year-old artist, was living in Vienna at the time, as was Lenin, who was in his "second emigration" and spent the years 1907 through 1914 in the Austrian capital. It was also alleged that both Hitler and Lenin frequented the House of Julius von Ludassy, a writer and theater critic, where Emma Löwenstamm presumably made the snapshot.

Editor's note: The photo, as it appeared in a Viennese newspaper, was so fuzzy that it would only come out as a surrealistic splotch of white, black and gray if Instauration tried to reproduce it.

Corsica. The Italian neo-fascists run strongest in the far south and Britain's National Front draws many of its leaders from that island's "Celtic fringe," so it isn't surprising that the up-and-coming French Front National has scored its biggest electoral triumph to date in one of the most racially Mediterranean parts of the republic -- the island of Corsica. On August 12, voters turned out to elect a new 61-seat regional assembly, as part of President Mitterrand's experiment with "devolution" of power from the extremely centralized government in Paris. (An earlier Corsican assembly, elected in 1982, was dissolved in June because of a budgetary deadlock.)

The party of Jean-Marie Le Pen, which scored well in the nationwide June elections for the European Parliament, did even better here in August, ending up with about 12% of the assemblymen. The establishment hardly seemed concerned, however, because various Corsican separatist parties did almost as well. These latter are understandably considered far more dangerous. In the first six months of 1984 alone, about 300 bombing incidents were reported on the island, many against French settlers from the mainland.

Spain. The time warp which Francisco Franco's authoritarian regime provided for Spain has been conclusively terminated by nearly two years of liberal Socialist Party rule. Crime, drugs and pornography are enjoying an explosive growth. Spain now leads the nations of Europe in the volume of heroin and cocaine seized by authorities. There are 80,000 heroin addicts in the land. The Sicilian Mafia is muscling into the once-clean scene. Drugs spell crime, and the total crime rate was up 32% in 1983 over the previous year. Worse, the number of robberies involving violence or intimidation rose 60% in the same year.

It is still possible to walk safely from one end of Madrid to the other after midnight, but that may not be true much longer. Already, shopkeepers have begun carrying pistols and using them. Nostalgia for Franco is growing. The Catholic Primate of Toledo has warned, "The way Spanish society is headed, we are risking an explosion of irrepressible popular anger that will sweep the country like a hurricane."

* * *

Another sign of reaction has been the rioting against Spanish Gypsies, who are now nearly half a million strong. Their unemployment rate is about 80%, which appears to suit most of them fine. Back in 1499, Ferdinand and Isabella ordered the Gypsies to find gainful work or leave in 70 days. Five hundred years later, they haven't gotten out and haven't found work. Yet, says Manuel Martin, leader of a Spanish group called the National Gypsy Presence, "The Gypsy people are innocent."

They have been in Europe for 1,500 years and they haven't changed their ways. Germans, Swedes and others who talk about "integrating" millions of nonwhite guest workers should give that melancholy fact some deep thought.

The "worst incident" to occur in Spain recently was when several hundred villagers in Torrendonjimeno, in the far south, surrounded the home of a Gypsy mugger and tried to burn it down. Fifty Gypsy women and children fled with severe burns. Of course, in the land whence the Gypsies originally came -- India -- it is commonplace for husbands to burn their own wives to death; 690 fatal "dowry burnings" took place in the city of New Delhi alone last year! So there should be no tears shed in the West when this invading brown army of junkmen, fiddlers, fortune-tellers and beggars gets back from the dark-whites of Andalusia what they have been handing out to whites for centuries.

Portugal. One of the most persecuted churchmen in modern times is Archbishop Valerian Trifa, who voluntarily gave up his U.S. citizenship some months ago and agreed to be deported in order to spare his Romanian Orthodox congregation further legal costs in the incessant Jewish-inspired harassment of him for his "alleged" anti-Semitism during and after World War II (alleged being put in quotes since he spent most of the war in German concentration camps).

Portugal recently agreed to accept Trifa, and he arrived there in August. Everything was fine until OSI, the U.S. Department of Justice's imitation of a KGB bureau, issued a press release saying Portugal had opened its doors to a war criminal. The Portuguese press then went bonkers and pilloried Trifa day and night in bilious front-page stories. In no time, Trifa's picture, dutifully transmitted by AP and UPI, was tacked on every street kiosk, until it got so that the Archbishop didn't dare eat in a restaurant for fear of being recognized. Trifa did appear on TV and was given an interview by one of the leading papers, but the stories about him continued to be overwhelmingly negative, as was the usual package of "background" material thoughtfully provided by Simon Wiesenthal.

The Portuguese government, under intense Zionist pressure, is now investigating the old calumnies against Trifa. It is quite possible he may be declared persona non grata, which means he will lose his residency permit. Where will Trifa go if he is hounded out of Portugal?

One place he won't go is Israel. The U.S. tried to get the Jewish state to take him and give him a show trial à la Eichmann. But Israel refused on the grounds that the evidence against him was too tenuous.

The way it looks now Trifa may be turned into a non-Jewish "Wandering Jew" by the descendants of the Wandering Jew.

Middle East. First, Arthur Koestler gave new life to the old Khazar or Central Asian theory of East European Jewish origins, in his book The Thirteenth Tribe (1976). Now, a leading Lebanese historian has suggested that, whatever the antecedents of today's Jews, they have returned to the wrong place.

Kamal Salibi, who is a professor at the American University of Beirut, a 55-year-old bachelor, and the patriarch of an old, rich and prominent family of Lebanese Protestants, has advanced the very un-Zionist theory that the events of the Hebrew Old Testament took place not in Palestine, but 900 miles to the south, in the Asir region of Arabia, which fronts the Red Sea for 350 miles between Mecca and Yemen.

Linguistic analysis is Salibi's method. For five years he has worked on a comprehensive survey of the place names in Arabia, comparing them with those of the Bible. In the Asir he has found two villages whose names are the Arabic equivalent of "Jerusalem," five which signify "Hebron," 11 derived from the word for "Canaan," and so on. Indeed, Salibi says he can precisely match half of the thousands of place names in the Old Testament with villages in the mountainous Asir region. And, with the kind of minor letter changes permitted in linguistics, he can locate another 30%.

Salibi's upcoming book, The Bible Came from Arabia, argues that nearly all Israelite history until about 500 B.C. took place in Arabia. It was only at the end of the Babylonian exile that the main body of Israelites joined with those few Jews who had previously drifted northward into Palestine. The great confusion over locations occurred, says Salibi, because the Hebrew "Masoretic" text was not finalized until A.D. 600-1000, or more than a millennium after Hebrew had become a linguistic fossil and the early books of the Bible had been compiled. Those early books used only consonants, and the selected vowel additions of the "Masoretic" text were badly prejudiced, in Salibi's opinion, by the editors' belief that Palestinian place names had originally been intended.

Salibi cannot be dismissed as an off-hand crank. The dean of Middle Eastern studies at Oxford University, Professor Albert Hourani, lends some support to the theory, and to Salibi's qualifications as historian and linguist. The prestigious American journal Foreign Affairs has commended one of Salibi's six books on Lebanese history for its "grasp and balance." And the London Sunday Times, which has already previewed his book-to-be, may also buy the English-language rights to it. The conscientious Salibi admits, however, that several incompletely researched chapters are still "full of mistakes." Shocked by his own discovery, he still speaks of it nervously. The Zionist reaction has been "very violent," he reports. Another hazard is the euphoria which causes him to "wake up every morning at 3:30 A.M., thinking about the Bible. After five years that gets tiring."

(1) When the late Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser was interviewed by the editor of the West German conservative journal, Deutsche Soldaten und National Zeitung, he had this to say about the Holocaust: "No one, even the simplest of men, takes seriously the lie about six million Jews who were murdered. How is it with you?"

(2) In 1967, Jordan's prime minister, who was subsequently ambassador to London, described the six million story as a "fable legend."

(3) The Egyptian statesman Muhammad Ali Aluba, like the young Anwar Sadat and many other countrymen, defended the militant German reaction against its Jewish minority.

It is well known that the German people is one of the most progressive in the world in science, technology, and nationalism, and it has an immunity which can defend it against the activities of Zionism. Nevertheless, Hitler realized what was weakening his people to the extent that it almost brought about its end. The same applies with greater force to other nations, which are not so immune.

(4) Abdallah al-Tall, who commanded the Arab Legion in the 1948 War of Israeli Independence and later became a Jordanian senator, stated that Hitler had been "wronged and slandered." In The Danger of World Jewry to Islam and Christianity, he argued that the blame for Europe's historic persecutions of Jews "applies first and foremost to the Jews themselves and their characteristics of treachery, deceitfulness, crime and treason," and only secondly to European civilization, which had sometimes responded excessively.

These and other Arab mouthings are roundly chastized by Dr. Yehoshafat Harkabi in his 1974 volume, Holocaust, in the "Israel Pocket Library."

South Africa. A United Nations working paper alleges that the South African Defense Force has built a research station where it is testing ethnic-specific biochemical weapons on prisoners. These "could be programmed to affect certain ethnic groups through the use of carefully selected biological viruses directed at the black population," the paper says.

"These allegations have been made in the past," a senior South African defense spokesman said wearily. "There is nothing new in this latest round."

Several years ago, a Milwaukee newspaper published an editorial advocating racial miscegenation and a one-race world as soon as possible. Why? Because otherwise genocide would "inevitably" be practiced through ethnic-specific weapons! (Apparently the editors had never heard about massive crop destruction by disease when a single genetic strain has been used over a wide area.)

South Africa's leading white satirist is Pieter-Dirk Uys (pronounced Ace), who began poking more than fun at the Afrikaner establishment in his one-man revues about four years ago. Five years ago, his wicked jabs at apartheid would not have been possible, Uys believes, but then, under Prime Minister Botha, the climate changed. Now Uys prances about dressed as a transvestite, portrays South Africa as an Orwellian, "Jaa, Baas" ("yes, boss") society, and offers up Archie Bunkerisms like "Kaffir" ("nigger") before mixed audiences. It all goes over pretty well in the urban, "yuppie" districts in which the half-Jewish, half-Afrikaner Uys feels most at home.

Olympic runner Zola Budd is only one of many athletes who has paid a heavy price for hailing from the land of apartheid. Two leading tennis players, Derek Tarr and Kevin Curren, are in the process of becoming American citizens so they can obtain visas and invitations to tournaments more easily. Tarr kicked his fatherland on the way out, saying, "I don't represent them, and I don't agree with their policies."

A new nationwide survey of whites here, released on August 20, showed that between 77% and 92% of the Afrikaans-speakers seek retention of the so-called "seven pillars of apartheid," the laws on Mixed Marriages, Immorality, Group Areas, Separate Education, Separate Amenities, Black Homelands and Separate Voters' Rolls. For English-speaking whites, the range of support was 38% to 64%. (Some pillars are more popular than others.)

Incredibly, the Afrikaans newspaper, Die Vaderland, reported that "it need not be accepted that the findings indicate a desire for retention of these laws," even on the part of Afrikaners. If an "acceptable alternative to these laws" were offered, one which would ensure "the survival of the White as a White in South Africa," the "resistance to their scrapping [would] disappear." How whites could long survive without legal apartheid, given the present political and social climate, was left carefully unexplained.

Zimbabwe. From a subscriber. Inflation, an enviable 4% at Independence, has surged to around 20%. Economic growth has plunged to zero, as foreign debt has doubled. Formerly an exporter of food, the country is now an importer because of a searing drought and a brain drain. A dusk-to-dawn curfew still operates in a sixth of the country, while thousands of troops wage a costly campaign against armed Matabele rebels. Earlier this year, Joshua Nkomo, the opposition leader, stated he had suffered more in the past three years than in his 33-year struggle against the whites. Officially about 1,000 whites are leaving every month. Those who stay do so because they could not duplicate their palatial residences and inexpensive domestic staff anywhere else. So they import colour videos and isolate themselves from reality.

Swaziland. This little black kingdom which straddles part of the border between Mozambique and South Africa, has been full of unrest since its king of sixty-odd years expired recently. Witchcraft is part of the problem. Authorities have announced a $450 fine for the use of witchcraft on the soccer-football playing field. The problem is that witch doctors often sprinkle "divine water" on an opposing team's goalposts. Supporters of the opposition must then urinate in the goal to negate the charm. "It was very embarrassing to Swaziland," said an official.

Philippines. The Moonies have been trying to buy up Uruguay, their logic being that by controlling several small countries a cult can become a world power. Now the followers of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the former guru of the Beatles, are moving in large numbers to the rickety republic of Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos. They have already purchased the privately run University of the East, whose 47,000 students make it the country's largest, and leased a 340-room hotel, the Mirador, from which to conduct a nationwide advertising blitz. Best of all, President Marcos and his wife seem to have converted to the Maharishi's quasi-religious "Unified Field" doctrine, which has this mostly Catholic country's clergymen up in arms. Henceforth, Marcos will be hailed as the "spiritual leader of mankind," say the 1,200 earnest, well-dressed, mostly Western men and women who have blitzed Manila "like an invasion from Mars," in the words of one member of parliament.

If the Moonies are being funded by the South Korean government, what about the Yogis? Has Marcos, who first took up yoga as a teenager, been secretly dipping into the public purse for the benefit of the Maharishi?

Japan. On August 1, 1983, Time magazine devoted an entire issue to Japan. Browsing under the various subject headings, one soon came to appreciate how much healthier that racially homogeneous society is than our own. Indeed, one could hardly help feeling envious at times.

• That the source of Japanese health is its racial-ethnic unity and not religious uniformity became apparent in the Religion section. Religious eclecticism is the rule in Japan, and some people insist they are part

Buddhist, part Shintoist and part Christian. A dangerous sect called Soka Gakkai (Value Creation Society) has appeared on the local Buddhist scene. It is intolerant of Shinto (traditional nature worship), calling it "heretical" and saying that it must be "destroyed." Soka Gakkai teaches that by continually repeating a certain magical phrase, one will obtain happiness and the good life.

Christian universalism is not easily peddled in this race-sensitive land. A Baptist missionary named Timothy Pietsche admits, "A Japanese Christian has to give his allegiance to a 'foreign' God and say that he's not first and foremost a Japanese -- an impossible task."

• The legal situation is particularly healthy in Japan, with only one attorney in private practice for every 10,000 citizens, compared to one in 400 in the United States. Yet these numbers only begin to tell the story. In criminal cases brought to trial, there is a 99% conviction rate: Prosecutors will only go before the bench if their case is strong. Civil damage suits are rare because of high, non-refundable filing fees and the absence of the American "contingency system" for lawyers' payments. Only 51 of the 763 Diet (Parliament) members are attorneys.

Court trials are deeply embarrassing to most Japanese, and avoided like the plague. William Kuntsler-style theatrics are not tolerated. Best of all, the Japanese show "a deeply ingrained reluctance to assess good and evil in others." The hypocrisy of a Nuremberg Trial would be almost unthinkable. In Japan, writes the jurist Takenori Kawashima, "there is no tension posed between what ought to be . . . morality, on one hand, and the realities of the human spirit and human society as it exists." This does not preclude idealism. If one feels the presence of talent and aspiration within oneself, then that too is part of what "is." But it does preclude much hypocrisy and the imposition of a pious, disembodied morality.

Perhaps most important is the Japanese emphasis on the nation and the social group.

Americans operate on the principle that the rights of individuals, and the wrongs done to them, are morally compelling claims worthy of full-dress legal battle. Although the Japanese have a highly developed sense of individual rights, social harmony, not personal justice, is the basis of their law. Litigation, never common, has actually decreased during the past 15 years.

Those who elect to sue are usually scorned by their neighbors. Similarly, Japanese companies have never felt a need for written contracts on deals. Even if everyone gets cheated on rare occasions, it beats routinely paying out tens of billions to an invader-army of shysters.

• The robbery rate in Japan was 1.9 per 100,000 people in 1980, compared to 234.5 per 100,000 in the U.S. This is partly because of the 15,600 "police boxes" or koban (actually one-room offices on street corners) set up throughout Japan. Officers on duty actually have time to drop in for a chat with lonely senior citizens. A Tokyo official observes, "The police have to be part of the community, or it would be impossible to make it a safe city."

• Freud and his "Oedipus complex" make little or no sense to the Japanese. (Carl Jung said it makes no sense to Europeans, but we are nonetheless forced to endure the mass promulgation of alien ideas.) The Japanese have their own national psychiatry instead. Many neuroses here are "culture-bound, centered on the overwhelming sense of obligation and dependence," both "familial" and "tribal." This does not mean that narcissistic individualism is encouraged as a balance. On the contrary, a popular folk treatment called naikan, used in schools, offices and prisons, "focuses on [the patient's] ingratitude toward the sacrifices of other persons." The therapist's message is that "the only escape from mental anguish is to plunge into acts of service." Similarly, the treatment called Morita "aims at erasing introspection."

For a week patients are confined to bed, with no visitors, no TV and no reading matter. Forced to wallow in their own thoughts, they come to see that action is better than endless self-obsession. Patients then work outdoors for two weeks, going from light to heavy labor. They also attend indoctrination lectures. No talk about the self is allowed. The whole program is tinged with a sense of resignation: things are the way they are, and all we can do is get on with life and do the best we can. Morita practitioners claim a cure rate of 90%.

A therapist in Japan is a shepherd, prodding straying lambs back toward the flock. Mental health means to live with and for others.

• "Women's liberation" is catching on in Japan, but in the moderate, sensible way one would expect from any intelligent, racially homogeneous people. The most popular female personality is the lovely Tetsuko Kuroyanagi, a TV talk show hostess who is a national institution.

The rudeness and alien ways of many American entertainment personalities serves to scare away many softer-spoken, old-stock Americans. But Tetsuko makes the unbrash feel at home. Her memoir, Tot-to-Chan, the Little Girl at the Window, which disarmingly advocates greater independence for Japanese women, has become the best-selling book in the nation's history.

Though the proportion of women in the Diet is not much lower than that in the U.S. Congress, the stridency and gender rivalry of American "feminism" is entirely absent. A Margaret Thatcher would not be impossible here, but a Geraldine Ferraro would be.

- The Japanese language retains many subtleties now lacking in most Western speech. When the Japanese speak, they are at least as interested in conveying emotional mood as mere ideas. This constant feedback prevents many unwanted alien intrusions from even achieving a foothold in the national soul. There is even a "quasi-language known as haragei, roughly translatable as 'belly talk,' in which the Japanese communicate without using any words at all -- only with techniques like artful silence."

- The average Japanese family spends eight hours and 15 minutes per day watching TV, a figure which leads the world. Fortunately, the leading educational network, NHK, is watched as much as all other networks combined. The high-quality programming "seems to confute the American notion that mass equals crass."

Australia. Once upon a time, well-known Jews like Maurice Samuel and Marcus Eli Ravage gave their Gentile readers an occasional glimpse of how organized Jewry really thought and operated. Then along came Uncle Adolf and nearly all the Samuels and Ravages clammed up. Only now, as 1945 fades into the mists, are Jewish lips loosening up again.

The talk of Australian Jewry these days is a new show-and-tell novel called The Merchants of Melbourne, by Alfred Zion. The author hastens to say that, "With this type of book one has to maintain that it is fiction."

Zion's protagonist, Nehemiah Israel, is patterned after himself. An outsider to the Jewish community because of his unorthodox views, Nehemiah grows disillusioned with the business antics of his Jewish acquaintances, and finally decides to exact a "terrible revenge" on those who have cheated and betrayed him.

Along the way, The Merchants of Melbourne (published in July by Ariosa, a company formed by a friend of Zion's) tells of charity poker games with $40,000 riding on one hand; describes the enormous rake-offs from fictional charities; recounts the illegal movement of money through high-ranking rabbis; and describes a "Saturday Morning Club" of Eastern European Jews who control much of Melbourne's business and finance through a complex maze of intermarriages.

The Jews of Melbourne will undoubtedly respond by saying that Zion is a liar and a crook. Some Gentiles won't need much persuading. Zion was in the headlines in 1979 when he fled to Israel and the United States allegedly owing $7 million to bilked Aussies. He must still face trial at the Supreme Court in Melbourne for the alleged theft of $600,000 from companies he controlled. But Zion insists he was betrayed and destroyed by Jewish colleagues who got him enmeshed in a series of increasingly confused corporate deals and cut him adrift (which sounds a lot like Samuel Roth's motive for writing Jews Must Live). Maybe it all happened because Zion had publicly condemned Zionist aggression and world Jewry's constant harping on the Holocaust. "In my view," he says of the latter, "it is something that is terribly wrong." What was "wrong" was not the Holocaust but the incessant jabbering and whimpering about it.

Whether it is Zion or his adversaries who are the guilty party (there's probably enough guilt to go around) is less important than the inside dope he's been spilling about the Melbourne power structure. Disgraced before the world, and figuring he had little more to lose, Zion blew the whistle on those nearest to him. So, too, Spiro Agnew, once beyond redemption, made lots of noise about how Jews had been the force which lifted him up and the force which brought him down.

Just because a man is a shady character doesn't mean he can't cast a bright light into shady places.

Peru. Devla Murphy's book, Eight Feet in the Andes, has some revealing information on the results of the land reform in the early 1970s in Peru. The land was taken away from the big landowners and distributed among the peasants and cooperative farmers, who are now in such a bad way they have asked their old bosses to take back their haciendas. But the latter say their former properties are now too rundown; that it would be too costly to restore them to their once prosperous state. The peasants, of course, are mostly Indians and mestizos. The landlords are whites of Spanish descent.

Later in the book, author Murphy delves into some racial aesthetics:

We've decided the mestizos are not physically attractive. In this respect, the mixture hasn't been a success. The Indians are far more attractive, especially those with "Inca" features.

Peru offers every possible skin shade from almost white to dark brown. But a true white woman is most uncommon . . . [H]ere, as in India, all the advertisements show true whites.

In a remote part of the Andes the author came across an "almost" white family:

Comparing this mestizo family -- mentally alert, well mannered, well built, well dressed, well organized and comparing them with the average Indian family, one again sees the shadow of doom over the native campesinos.

Devla Murphy was not overcome with admiration for local churchmen:

One is appalled by the sloth and greed of the native Peruvian clergy. They don't minister to the people of the Sierra. This materially nonrewarding job is left to foreign priests -- Germans, Irish, Americans, Italians, Poles and Dutch. In fact, not many Peruvians have become priests, but those who do, cluster around the urban rich like bluebottles around bad meat.

Meeting a young Indian who had had a university education, the author comments:

He is grossly contemptuous of Peru and longs to emigrate. Yet he would probably take massive umbrage if we gringos criticized his country. It upsets me to find among the young this compulsive longing to escape.

They blame the U.S. for their troubles -- but that is where they all hope to escape to.

The young Indian says:

You have all heard talk of a united Peru, with all the citizens equal and working together for the good of the nation. That is nonsense. It can never happen. There is no room in Peru for two races whose minds have never met after 450 years of sharing the same country. Either the Indians take over or they go even further under as the others exploit the land with new technology. I know in my brain that the Indian must go under. But still in my heart I want to bring the campesinos into the modern world and help them survive because they are my people.

Another native Peruvian has an equally bleak view:

How can the campesinos be expected to own large estates? Nothing in their tradition helps them to think for themselves -- they don't even have a living oral literature. Yet it would be wise to see them managing their land and all fair shares. But in fact rural Peru is now much worse off than before land reform. You have found you cannot often buy milk, cheese, eggs, even in the middle of naturally rich farmland. Ten years ago this was not so. And look at the state of the fields, the animals, the implements.

The author sums up:

Nature insists on the survival of the fittest and the Spaniards represented a race that was mentally, though not morally, fitter than the Andes Indians. Blame and sympathy are equally out of place when one looks at it from this perspective . . . [N]ever the twain shall meet applies even more to the European and the Andes Indian than the European or any Asian race, including Chinese.

VFW vs. OSI, KGB, ADL

A major national organization has come down hard against the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations (OSI) and its illegal activities. At its national convention in Chicago on August 20, the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) passed a resolution condemning the persecution of naturalized American citizens on the basis of "evidence" provided by the Soviet KGB. The resolution noted that at least two former refugees, accused of war crimes, had already committed suicide, while others were threatening to do so rather than suffer deportation to Israel or a Communist bloc nation. The resolution also noted that the American media have "chosen to maintain a hands-off position as to publicizing these shameful trials," with the exception of The Spotlight and the Ukrainian Weekly (300 Montgomery Street, Jersey City, NJ 07302). Pointing to the use of doctored tapes and dubious "witnesses" by the KGB, the statement concluded:

BE IT RESOLVED that the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States request of President Ronald Reagan that an immediate and full inquiry be conducted into the affairs of the Office of Special Investigations to determine whether the civil rights of any persons have been violated . . . and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the United States Senate be petitioned through proper channels, to immediately launch an open inquiry into the entire affairs of the Office of Special Investigations covering all aspects of its activities, both in the United States and external to the United States, in such a manner that the American people may be enabled to be thoroughly and completely informed about the [OSI] and thereby be able to determine whether such activities are in the best security interests of the United States . . .

In response to this and related developments, the OSI's current director, Neal Sher, fled to the Anti-Defamation League (ADL), where he gave an address stating that the Soviet standards of evidence in the 40 denaturalization and deportation cases now pending measure up fully to American standards. "The truth is that we go to great lengths to insure that any evidence used is genuine and trustworthy," he insisted. As an example, Sher cited the case of Mikola Kowalchuk, in which Soviet witnesses, testifying in the presence of Soviet prosecutors, had provided the exculpatory testimony which persuaded the OSI to drop the case. Besides, Sher reasoned, the West German courts also rely on KGB-supplied testimony.

The basic flaw in the OSI position transcends individual cases, however. Consider Sher's closing remarks to the ADL:

It is difficult to conceive of even the KGB fabricating document after document and suborning perjury from witness after witness in OSI cases . . .

Will we go wherever necessary to find the evidence? Of course, that is our duty and responsibility. There is too much at stake. Too many people suffered and died to give Hitler a posthumous victory.

Without a doubt, the Nazis and their collaborators did commit many brutal acts in Eastern Europe -- but the Communists, over a much longer period of time, committed many more. So why isn't Sher concerned that Stalin will gain a posthumous victory? In The Gulag Archipelago, the great Solzhenitsyn himself argues that collaboration with the German invaders was often the morally commendable (or at least less reprehensible) thing to do. Yet, says Sher, anyone who served in any "military or paramilitary unit known to have been involved in persecution and atrocities" is "automatically ineligible to immigrate to this country." He neglected to add that this stringent rule only applies to people on the Axis side, not war criminals from Communist countries.

It doesn't matter, in other words, if one's own hands are clean: just having served with the losers makes one dirty. Meanwhile, Communist killers from Russia, China and Cuba have entered America by the thousands.

Give Us Back Our Liberty

Generations of American schoolchildren have been taught that the Statue of Liberty symbolizes our country's openness to mass immigration. It has reached the point where sober proposals to exert control over our borders are greeted with cartoons showing Liberty crying.

The French people have a legitimate complaint with the Jews on this score. It was they who raised the money a century ago to have Frédéric Auguste Bartholdi's 152-foot-high, copper-sheeted statue built in parts, shipped to America, assembled and unveiled on October 28, 1886. The only message intended was, "World take note -- America is a haven of liberty."

It was 22 years later that a plaque bearing Emma Lazarus's poem, "The New Colossus," was tacked onto the base of the statue. "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free, the wretched refuse of your teeming shore" -- words which recently provoked Zip 623 to exclaim, "Emma Lazarus wrote America's epitaph."

F.A. Bartholdi

From 1908 on, a small army of Jewish scribes, led by Israel Zangwill, labored to convey the revised meaning of the Statue of Liberty to an ignorant nation. A Judeo-centric leftist was thereby allowed to appropriate a great symbol which she and her people neither created nor paid for.

Now, while Liberty is being restored for its centennial (the fund-raising hoopla is under the direction of publicity hound Lee Iacocca), someone is circulating a flyer which demands the removal of the Lazarus plaque and the revision of American school texts to reflect the French people's wishes. Protest letters should be sent to Statue of Liberty, P.O. Box 1986, New York, NY 10018, or the French-American Committee for the Restoration of the Statue of Liberty, c/o French Embassy, 2535 Belmont Rd., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20008.

A Little Good News Today

The Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill has gone down the drain in the 98th Congress -- and because of the amnesty provision, who can mourn it? But at least something good did come out of the pro and con editorials devoted to it by the media. Congress has appropriated an extra $66 million in the 1985 budget for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. This will mean 850 additional Border Patrol officers and another 150 paper shufflers to back them up. It's the biggest single boost for the INS since it was established.

Quaint Reprisal

A New York Times vending box has been tarred and feathered in the historic town of Lenox, Massachusetts. In this case, it apparently happened because residents resented the intrusion of contemporary design into their colonial landscape. But one can well imagine that future tar-and-featherings may occur for other reasons.

The Organic Homo

It may take a long time for modern social science to admit it, but the bumpy, twisted corkscrew trail of human behavior always seems to lead back to biology. For instance, although everyone but liberals and Marxists now know that homosexuality has an organic source, from reading the New York Times one would think it is a purely environmental happenstance, about as non-deterministic as the flip of a coin. Recently, Dr. Brian A. Gladue and a team of scientists at the State University of New York have taken a giant step forward in proving Mother Nature's heavy hand in homosexuality by recent tests conducted on 17 straight men, 12 straight women and 14 homosexual males. When injected with estrogen, a female hormone, the straight women responded strongly with a change in their levels of LH, a brain hormone that regulates sexual functions. The heterosexual men showed almost no response, while nine of the homosexuals did have noticeable reactions. When testosterone, the male hormone, was injected in the straight and homosexual males, the heterosexuals showed a much stronger response than the homos.

Different responses to sex hormones is a pretty strong indication that homosexuals are not like you and me, but belong to a third sex and should be so treated and considered. Dr. Gladue's tests suggest that nothing can be done about the dyed-in-the-wool homo. He is fixed by fate. But the tests also seem to show there are borderline homos who can be kept straight if brought up in a healthy environment and not exposed to the corrupting influences of the gays. The Democratic Party platform to the contrary, this is a rather compelling reason to keep 100% gays out of jobs, like teaching, which bring them into close and dangerous contact with children.

No Jewish Goldbricking in Space

Jewish astronauts who go for a spin in the space shuttle won't have to worry about being in orbit on Saturdays. Shlomo Goren, the erstwhile chief rabbi of Jerusalem, has ruled that Jews cannot celebrate the Sabbath in space. After some fancy Talmudic casuistry, the rabbi came to the conclusion that since earth time is calculated by the movements of the sun and moon, it has no meaning in the wild blue yonder. "The earthly days, nights and holidays simply do not exist for the traveler in space," he theologized. Non-Jewish astronauts should be thankful. If Rabbi Goren had decided otherwise, the crew of the Challenger and Discovery might not only have had to take over from Judith Resnik or future Judiths as they rested on the Seventh Day, but the crew would also have had to suffer their cabin being smoked up with burning candles.

Sangre Azul

True blue Spanish Americans feel as outraged as racially aware Majority members when the media label all Hispanics as whites. A Washington-based Castilian, Fernando Prado, reacted to this all-too-common misnomer in a splenetic letter to the Washington Post (June 28, 1984), which had printed an article by reporter Margaret Shapiro that had described Mexican Americans as having a "Spanish appearance." Señor Prado complained that Ms. Shapiro must have meant a Latin American appearance (given the fact that most Latin Americans from Mexico and Central America have strong Indian features, and those from Puerto Rico have a high percentage of Negro blood) . . . Would she say that Jesse Jackson has an English appearance because he has an English name? Or that New York Gov. Mario Cuomo has an English appearance because he was born in the United States?

How much more of this do we Spaniards, as Europeans, have to put up with?

A Spanish American of presumably pure blood is Anthony Francis Gonzáles, whose Comité Americano Hispano will not admit Mexican Americans "porque no son blancos" ('cause they ain't white). Gonzáles defines a white Hispanic as a racially unmixed "direct descendant of the Spanish Conquistadores who came to the New World in the 16th century."

Unhappily for Gonzáles, the first "officially Hispanic" astronaut is Franklin B. Chang, a Ph.D. in physics and the son of a Chinese father and a Costa Rican mother. He is booked to fly in the space shuttle in 1985.

Declining to Whine

Miami Fire Chief Ken McCullough called it a "disaster" that could create havoc in his department. A Hispanic firefighter with the unlikely name of Henry Harrison had refused a quota-based promotion to lieutenant over five white non-Hispanic colleagues with better qualifications. The refusal cost him a $3,000-a-year raise in salary. The next day, a second Hispanic fireman in Miami refused a similar promotion. In all likelihood, both these men of character were white Cubans, a breed apart.

Chins Up

Those of us who have been waiting, waiting, waiting for something to turn the country around, waiting for a man or group of men to lift us out of the quagmire in which we have been sinking deeper every year, should be forgiven for tossing in the towel. Decade after decade has gone by, yet there is still no sign of relief on the horizon.

We must see to it that these frustrated people, some of whom are our best specimens, are not forever lost to the cause. We must get across to them the lesson that history does not work like clockwork on a fixed timetable. Yes, it is characterized by cycles, but cycles which come and go haphazardly and asymmetrically.

The fact is, even if you are not one of those who have fallen into a dark apathetic gloom, even if you are one of the happy few who still manage to see a few bright flashes of hope, there is little that you can do to hasten the day of our deliverance. Only events, cataclysmic events, will come to our rescue, events which only the most pessimistic Orwellians dare to predict, but which are right now aborning in the deepest currents of history. Inflation at 150% a year; the crime rate doubling every six months; 40% unemployment; cities burning; minorities becoming majorities and taking over the megalopolises; foreign wars, including the inevitable Armageddon to save Israel; and affirmative action accelerated by specific racial laws favoring blacks, Hispanics and Asians in all jobs and promotions! Let only part of the above scenario take place and watch the fireworks! Overnight the whole mood of our people will undergo a dramatic shift. The whole monstrosity of U.S. politics will suddenly become apparent. The whole sedated approach to our dispossession will be cast aside and our people will begin to boil.

Unfortunately, no matter what we do, no matter how well we prepare for the worst, we must remain prisoners of events. By all means, let us study, read, argue, debate and jawbone from dusk to dawn. We will learn something of what has been done to us, and we may obtain a fairly realistic picture of the forces that are doing us in and must never be allowed to do us in again. But we can't take any effective steps to end our predicament until events start to unfold -- as unfold they will. Only then will our best brains and our best brawn take heart and begin to move.

So we must wait patiently. So far their hour has come. But our hour is coming. When it does, we may not win, but, paraphrasing a line from our second greatest poetess, "Ah, my foes, and oh, my friends, it will be a lovely fight."

Election Hangover

A few weeks before the election, Walter Mondale told a gathering of four Jewish tycoons assembled in Washington, "I would rather lose the campaign with the Jews than win without them." He got his wish. Some 70% of Jewish voters joined him in defeat. The remaining 30% were, so to speak, Reaganized. Among those who bled with Mondale were such close friends and financial brain trusters as John Gutfreund of Salomon Brothers, Irving Shapiro, the former Du Pont chairman, and Herbert Allen, the moneybags of Hollywood trash films and associate of David Begelman, the noted check forger. All of these super-rich Mondale boosters have a warm spot in their hearts for the poor and a warmer spot in their portfolios for lucre.

Poor Fritz! Even his dearly beloved and dearly wooed homos couldn't save him. No one much seemed to care that his starlet daughter Eleanor had studied Swahili in Kenya, where she had "the greatest time in my life." Not even liberals went wild with glee when the candidate, who had proclaimed himself the great guardian and protector of the wall between church and state, went out of his way not to criticize Bishop Tutu, the latest black winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, for preaching against Reagan in several American pulpits at the height of the campaign. Even his "courageous" decision not to accept any campaign contributions from Arab Americans fell only on Jewish ears. And even his pals in the press felt queasy at what he wrote for the inauguration of Golda Meir Square in New York City:

I knew Golda...I loved her...With Golda, I believe that justice will prevail, that human dignity will prevail, that peace will prevail....Strength and honor were indeed her clothing. She opened her mouth with wisdom. We her children call her blessed.

On his worst day Reagan would balk at ladling out such drivel.

Mrs. Mafia, who would have been the first vice-president, but perhaps not the last, to belong to a blatantly racist Zionist outfit, Pioneer Women/Na'amat, also became an also-ran. Poor "Mr.

Ferraro!" He'll never attend the cabinet meetings he insisted he would grace with his presence. His exact words: "Even if they don't like it, I would sit in. I want to know what's going on." For a month or so Geraldine had thumbed her nose at the media by refusing to answer any questions about her father's and mother's arrest for operating a numbers racket or about hubby John's shady real estate deals with gangsters. Except for a few papers here and there, the megamedia honored her omerta. The "impact press" also refrained from bringing up Reagan's connections with the mob--his social or political dealings with Frank Sinatra, Jackie Presser of the Teamsters, other assorted union goons, and Senator Paul Laxalt, good friend of Moe Dalitz and ex-owner with another dubious character of a Nevada gambling den.

Indeed "twas a famous victory," but for whom? Reagan may not last out his second term and, if he does, he may deeply regret it. Massive budget-busting can only yield to inflation and mucho más inflation. Reaganomics was saved by ye olde economic cycle--after every bust must come a boom. But when things get tough again, Ronnie, who presides over the bottomless-pit deficit like a Democrat, will have to do more than send Nancy to sit on Mr. T's lap.

No sooner had the polls closed on November 6 than George Bush, the grandfather of three bouncing mestizos (two niños, one niña), started running for the 1988 sweepstakes. He had some catching up to do because Howard Baker, who is quitting the Senate to make the race, has had a two-year headstart. Gary Hartpence Hart, wearing a wide "I-told-you-so-grin" after the Mondale Donnybrook, has also put on his track shoes. If he had been the Democratic nominee, perish the thought, he might have won a couple of eastern states, but he would have lost Minnesota.

Jesse Jackson and Louis Farrakhan are still alive and anxious, as the Bible (Acts 9:5) would say, to "kick at the pricks." But they've faded from the front pages. Neither contributed greatly to the Demo cause, but Jesse or someone like Jesse is going to swing a lot of weight in the Party's smoke-filled rooms for some time to come. How do you get rid of the blacks when they're the most loyal of all Democrats, although their loyalty is complicated by the fact that for every new black Demo vote, one white Demo bolts to the GOP? Oh, the Demos have promised themselves and anyone else who cares to listen that they will now get cracking, regroup, rethink and come out with tons of new ideas. They will huff and puff alright, but their course is unfortunately fixed. Willy-nilly, they'll go on playing the minority game until their minorities breed themselves into a majority. Their only other hope is another Great Depression, for which they pray daily and which would allow them to drag out the old class war line and feed the masses massive doses of the old Demo manna known as envy.

Class war, race war, they're all one in a multicolored country like the USA. It's the Majority agin the minorities and the many Majority splitters-in-the-ranks. That's the issue that cuts across every other issue. Reagan won because the Majority is still in the majority, and because he is perceived, somewhat myopically, as the champion of the white cause. That he is a wise dummy (wise politically, dumb every other way) and will do no more in his second term for our threatened mores and threatened selves than he did in his first term is not the point. He won--and that's all he and his "smart-assed white boys," as Andy Young called them, wanted. Winning is the limit of their ambition and imagination. They don't give two hoots if in the process and aftermath of victory their own people slip one notch further into oblivion. They won. Only votes matter. The hell with immigration, fiscal solvency, busing, reverse discrimination, and the emetic flood of crime, pornography, drugs and twisted sex. They're just annoying little tacks on the seats of power.

Tens of thousands of speeches, tens of thousands of media mullings, hundreds of millions of dollars shot--and all for what? A Republican Senate, Democratic House and Republican White House. It's a strange alchemy that forces the cream to the bottom and the milksops to the top. Verily, we are still in the simian stage of political evolution.
